Which of the following variable types BEST describes the "Year" column?

- A. Alphanumeric
- B. Date
- C. Numeric
- D. Text

Answer: B

Explanation:

This is because date is a type of variable that represents a specific point or period in time, such as a day, a month, or a year. Date variables can be used to store, manipulate, or analyze temporal data, such as transaction dates, birth dates, or expiration dates. For example, date variables can be used to calculate the duration or the difference between two dates, or to filter or sort the data by date. The other variable types are not correct descriptions of the "Year" column. Here is why:

* Numeric is a type of variable that represents a numerical value, such as an integer, a decimal, or a fraction. Numeric variables can be used to store, manipulate, or analyze quantitative data, such as amounts, prices, or scores. For example, numeric variables can be used to perform arithmetic operations or calculations on the data, or to measure the central tendency or the dispersion of the data.

* Alphanumeric is a type of variable that represents a combination of alphabetic and numeric characters, such as letters, numbers, symbols, or spaces. Alphanumeric variables can be used to store, manipulate, or analyze textual data, such as names, addresses, or codes. For example, alphanumeric variables can be used to concatenate or split the data, or to search or match the data using patterns or expressions.

* Text is a type of variable that represents a sequence of alphabetic characters, such as letters or words.

Text variables can be used to store, manipulate, or analyze textual data, such as names, categories, or labels. For example, text variables can be used to change the case or the length of the data, or to compare or classify the data using criteria or rules.
