NEW QUESTION # 38

What is one element of the CALMR approach to DevOps?

- A. Commit to accelerated delivery
- B. Create a culture of shared responsibility
- C. Communicate risk
- D. Create a flow of value

Answer: B

Explanation:

The CALMR approach to DevOps in SAFe stands for Culture, Automation, Lean Flow, Measurement, and Recovery. It represents the foundational mindset required to achieve continuous delivery and operational excellence.

The "C" in CALMR stands for Culture, which emphasizes building a culture of shared responsibility between development, operations, and business teams. This shared responsibility ensures alignment, collaboration, and a collective focus on delivering value rather than working in silos.

From SAFe guidance:

"DevOps is founded on a culture of shared responsibility for the delivery of value, encouraging collaboration across all roles and reducing handoffs." Therefore, the correct answer is B. Create a culture of shared responsibility, as it reflects the first and most essential principle of the CALMR approach.

NEW QUESTION # 39

What is one anti-pattern of the Inspect and Adapt?

- A. Not enough preparation goes into the quantitative and qualitative measurement section
- B. Product Managers lead the problem-solving workshop
- C. Product Owners present all of the work in the PI System Demo
- D. Too many teams present Enablers and technical debt

Answer: A

Explanation:

In SAFe, the Inspect and Adapt (I&A) event is critical for enabling relentless improvement at the Agile Release Train (ART) level. It consists of three parts: the PI System Demo, quantitative and qualitative measurement, and a problem-solving workshop.

An important anti-pattern during I&A is when not enough preparation goes into the quantitative and qualitative measurement section. Without proper preparation-such as collecting team metrics, business value achievement data, and feedback-the event loses its empirical foundation. Teams may focus only on anecdotal issues instead of addressing measurable trends or root causes.

The I&A relies on meaningful metrics to guide discussion, measure performance, and identify systemic improvements. Poor preparation in this section weakens the effectiveness of the event and prevents data-driven decision-making.

From SAFe guidance:

"The I&A event requires preparation of quantitative and qualitative data. Insufficient preparation reduces the quality of the session and limits learning." Thus, the correct answer is D. Not enough preparation goes into the quantitative and qualitative measurement section.
