NREMT Emergency Medical Technicians Exam Sample Questions (Q235-Q240):

NEW QUESTION # 235

A person grabs your arm during an argument. This is considered

- A. false imprisonment.
- B. harassment.
- C. assault.
- D. battery.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is C. Battery.

This question tests knowledge of legal definitions relevant to EMS providers, particularly distinguishing between assault and battery.

* Battery is defined as unlawful physical contact with another person without consent.

* In this scenario, the act of grabbing your arm constitutes intentional physical contact, which meets the definition of battery.

According to NREMT-aligned EMS legal principles:

- * "Battery is the unlawful touching of another person without consent." Why the other options are incorrect:
- * A. Harassment: Typically involves repeated or persistent unwanted behavior, not necessarily physical contact.
- * B. Assault: Defined as threatening or attempting to cause harm, creating fear of imminent harm- without actual physical contact.
- * D. False imprisonment: Involves restricting a person's freedom of movement without legal authority, not simply grabbing an arm.

Key NREMT Distinction:

- * Assault = threat of harm
- * Battery = actual physical contact

Exact Extracts:

- * "Assault is placing a person in fear of immediate harm."
- * "Battery is the unlawful touching of a patient without consent."

NEW QUESTION # 236

What is the primary objective of transfer of care education?

- A. Patient safety
- B. Consent concerns
- C. Autonomy
- D. Clinical knowledge

Answer: A

Explanation:

The correct answer is B because the primary goal of transfer of care education in EMS is to ensure continuity of care and patient safety during the handoff process.

NREMT-aligned EMS education emphasizes that transferring care-from EMS to another provider (such as hospital staff)-must include clear, accurate communication of the patient's condition, treatments given, and any changes observed. This reduces medical errors, prevents loss of critical information, and ensures safe ongoing treatment.

Therefore, the central objective is maintaining patient safety through effective communication and continuity of care .

NEW QUESTION # 237

An 18-month-old patient has had a fever and cough for the past week and is now having difficulty breathing.

The patient has coarse crackles in their right lower lung. Which of the following conditions should the EMT most strongly suspect as the cause of the patient ' s signs and symptoms?

- A. Sinusitis
- B. Croup
- C. Epiglottitis
- D. Pneumonia

Answer: D

Explanation:

This presentation fits pneumonia best. The clue that points most strongly in that direction is the combination of fever + cough + breathing difficulty + focal crackles in one lower lung field . In young children, pneumonia commonly causes cough, fever, and trouble breathing , and focal crackles or other localized lung findings increase suspicion for a lower respiratory infection involving the lung tissue itself. ( CDC ) A quick way to think about it in EMT terms is this: upper-airway illnesses such as croup or epiglottitis usually point you toward sounds like stridor and obvious upper-airway involvement, while this question gives a localized lower-lung finding in the right lower lung , which is much more consistent with pneumonia. ( Merck Manuals )

NEW QUESTION # 238

The key to effectively managing a multiple casualty incident is to

- A. Utilize the incident command structure.

- B. Defer resource decisions to the first arriving chief officer.
- C. Initiate START triage procedures immediately.
- D. Request additional resources as early as possible.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The foundation of effective multiple-casualty incident (MCI) management is the Incident Command System (ICS). NREMT teaches that ICS provides clear leadership, communication, accountability, and coordination of resources.

Option D is correct because ICS allows for scalable management, efficient delegation, and integration of multiple agencies.

Option B is important but is a component of ICS, not the core principle.

Option C is a tactical step that occurs within the command structure.

Option A misunderstands ICS, as command is established based on arrival, not rank alone.

NREMT stresses that without ICS, MCIs become chaotic and unsafe, regardless of clinical skill.

NEW QUESTION # 239

You observe your partner as he completes a patient care report. He documents giving a medication that you know he did not administer. You should first

- A. report it to the medical director.
- B. ask him to correct his report.
- C. contact your supervisor.
- D. inform the patient 's family.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is B because the first appropriate action is to address the error directly and immediately by having your partner correct the patient care report. EMS documentation guidance used in national EMT education is clear that the PCR must be accurate and factual, and specifically states that providers must not chart treatments that were not actually given. For example, official EMT instructional guidance says that if a treatment such as oxygen was overlooked, do not document that it was given. Because the false entry is being made at the time of documentation, the first step is to stop the inaccurate charting and get it corrected. If your partner refuses, then the issue should be escalated through the chain of command. Accurate PCR documentation is part of patient care, legal documentation, and quality assurance in EMS.
