- A. A custom exception class can extend other classes besides the Exception class.
- B. A custom exception class cannot contain member variables or methods.
- C. A custom exception class name must end with "Exception".
- D. A custom exception class can implement one or many interfaces.
- E. A custom exception class must extend the system Exception class.

Answer: C,D,E

Explanation:

Custom exceptions in Apex are user-defined exception classes that can have their own member variables, methods, constructors, and interfaces. They must extend the system Exception class and have a class name that ends with "Exception". They cannot extend other classes besides the Exception class. Custom exceptions enable more detailed error messages and custom error handling in catch blocks. They can also be rethrown as inner exceptions to preserve the stack trace information.

NEW QUESTION # 187

A Salesforce Administrator used Flow Builder to create a flow named "accountOnboarding". The flow must be used inside an Aura component.

Which tag should a developer use to display the flow in the component?

- A. Aura:flow
- B. Lightning:flow
- C. Aura:flow

- D. Lightning-flow

Answer: B

Explanation:

The developer should use the Lightning:flow tag to display the flow in the Aura component. The Lightning:flow tag is a base Lightning component that allows you to embed a flow in an Aura component and interact with it programmatically. The Lightning:flow tag has attributes that let you specify the name of the flow, pass input values to the flow, handle the flow status change event, and control the flow navigation. The Lightning:flow tag supports only screen flows and autolaunched flows.

The other options are not valid tags for displaying a flow in an Aura component. There is no such tag as Lightning-flow or Aura:flow. The aura:component tag is the root tag of the Aura component hierarchy, but it does not display a flow by itself.
