APEGS National Professional Practice Examination (NPPE) Exam Sample Questions (Q68-Q73):

NEW QUESTION # 68

A licensed professional civil engineer is assigned by their employer to review and approve a building's structural design drawings. The design includes a vaulted component. Although the professional has not worked with vaulted designs in the past, they have recently completed an extensive "Cathedral and Vaulted Ceilings" engineering design course. The professional is confident in their knowledge and ability to competently review and assess this type of design.

Is it appropriate for the professional to accept the current assignment?

- A. Yes, as the professional has the appropriate training and is confident in their ability to perform the task correctly.
- B. No, as the professional is restricted to working within their area of expertise.
- C. No, as the professional is misrepresenting their abilities and lacks the required competence.
- D. Yes, provided the employer is aware of the professional's deficiencies and accepts full responsibility on the professional's behalf.

Answer: A

Explanation:

NPPE ethics and professional practice principles require professionals to practise only in areas where they are competent, based on education, training, and experience, and to take reasonable steps to maintain and enhance competence. Competence is not limited to tasks previously performed; it can be achieved through appropriate training and learning, provided the professional can competently apply that knowledge and recognizes limits.

Here, the engineer has recently completed extensive, targeted training relevant to vaulted structural designs and is confident they can competently review and assess the drawings. Accepting the assignment is appropriate if the professional genuinely has the competence to perform the review to the standard of a reasonably prudent practitioner, and if they will seek peer review or additional specialist input if any aspect exceeds their capability. Option A is too restrictive because "area of expertise" can expand through professional development. Option B is incorrect because the scenario states the professional has obtained training and is not misrepresenting abilities. Option D is incorrect because responsibility for competent professional judgment cannot be transferred to an employer; the professional remains accountable for work they approve.

NEW QUESTION # 69

A client has overruled the technical advice of Jane, a professional member, on equipment purchase. The client claims the recommended equipment is too expensive and proposes a cheaper, outdated piece of equipment that has not been used in the industry for several years. What is the best course of action for Jane to take?

- A. Explain her technical advice in writing to the client and request a response from the client in writing stating that the client fully understands the advice and the consequences of ignoring it
- B. Resign in protest from the project as the client is incompetent and does not value her technical advice
- C. Allow the client to overrule her technical advice since the client is paying for her engineering services
- D. Report the client to the appropriate authorities as the client failed to follow her technical advice and is likely to not follow the technical advice of other professional members

Answer: A

Explanation:

NPPE professional practice guidance emphasizes documenting advice, communicating risks clearly, and ensuring the client makes informed decisions-while the professional must not allow public safety or regulatory compliance to be compromised. When a client rejects professional recommendations for cost reasons, the professional should provide the rationale, risks, life-cycle implications, and any safety/code /regulatory consequences in writing. Obtaining written acknowledgment helps ensure clarity, reduces misunderstanding, and creates a record that the professional fulfilled the duty to warn. This aligns with option D). Option A is incorrect because the client paying does not override the professional's obligations; if the alternative is unsafe or non-compliant, the professional must not endorse it and may need to withdraw. Option B may be appropriate later if the client insists on an unsafe/non-compliant choice, but resignation is not the best initial step before clear written warning and documentation. Option C is generally inappropriate as an initial action; clients are not typically reportable simply for choosing cheaper equipment unless it creates an imminent hazard or violates law requiring reporting. Therefore, D is the best course initially.

NEW QUESTION # 70

A "dummy run" for commercial software is best described as

- A. sample testing performed by a non-expert user
- B. the application of analytical calculations of a simpler model and comparing them with the software's result
- C. a basic check on the program's computation, using nominal entries such as zeroes or ones, to get a known answer
- D. a full-scale duplication of the computation with different software, hardware, and Inputs

Answer: C

Explanation:

A "dummy run" in the context of commercial software testing refers to a basic check on the program's computation using nominal entries, like zeros or ones, to yield a known result. This method is used to verify that the software performs basic operations correctly and is able to handle simple inputs without errors .

NEW QUESTION # 71

Before approving work done by others not under his or her direct supervision, a professional member must:

- A. verbally interview all of the people who completed the work

- B. re-do all calculations completed as part of the work
- C. complete a thorough review of the work
- D. complete a cursory review of the work

Answer: C

Explanation:

Approving (or sealing) work means accepting professional responsibility for it. NPPE practice guidance stresses that a professional must not rely blindly on work prepared by others outside their direct supervision.

To accept responsibility, the professional must perform a level of review and verification sufficient to be confident the work meets the applicable standard of care, is fit for purpose, and complies with relevant codes and requirements. This requires a thorough review (C), which may include checking key assumptions, inputs, methods, calculations, and outputs, and obtaining clarification or additional information where needed. It does not necessarily require redoing every calculation (B) in full, but the review must be substantive.

Interviewing everyone involved (A) is not required and is not a substitute for technical verification. A cursory review (D) is inadequate to support responsible approval. Therefore, C is correct.

NEW QUESTION # 72

Which of the following rights is not one of the fundamental rights of workers defined by Canadian OH&S legislation?

- A. The right to participate in the prevention of occupational accidents
- B. The right to be informed of known health hazards in the workplace
- C. The right to refuse dangerous work
- D. The right to sue the employer for workplace injuries

Answer: D

Explanation:

Canadian occupational health and safety systems commonly identify three fundamental worker rights: the right to know about hazards (information, instruction, training) (D), the right to participate in workplace health and safety (e.g., through reporting, representatives, and committees) (C), and the right to refuse unsafe work in defined circumstances without reprisal (A). The right to sue an employer for workplace injuries is generally not a fundamental OHS right and is often limited by workers' compensation regimes, which typically provide no-fault benefits in exchange for restricting lawsuits against employers for most workplace injuries. While legal avenues may exist in exceptional circumstances (e.g., third-party liability), suing the employer is not part of the core OH&S rights framework emphasized in NPPE materials. Therefore, B is the right that is not considered one of the fundamental OH&S rights.
