Oracle Database 19c: Data Guard Administration Sample Questions (Q95-Q100):

NEW QUESTION # 95

Which three Data Guard monitoring activities may be performed using Enterprise Manager Cloud Control?

- A. You can monitor the redo apply rate on a snapshot standby database.
- B. You can check the potential data loss in the event of a disaster.
- C. You can monitor the redo apply rate on a logical standby database.
- D. You can set a warning threshold on the redo generation rate metric for a physical standby database.
- E. You can check if redo apply needs to be tuned.
- F. You can set a critical threshold on the redo generation rate metric for a primary database.

Answer: B,C,F

Explanation:

Enterprise Manager Cloud Control offers comprehensive monitoring capabilities for Oracle Data Guard environments. It enables monitoring the rate at which redo is being applied on a logical standby database (A), which is crucial for ensuring that the standby database is keeping up with the changes from the primary. It also allows setting thresholds on performance metrics, such as the redo generation rate on the primary database (B), to alert administrators when values exceed critical or warning thresholds. Additionally, it provides the capability to estimate the potential data loss in the event of a disaster (E), helping in disaster recovery planning and ensuring business continuity.

References: Oracle Enterprise Manager Cloud Control documentation provides extensive information on its monitoring features for Oracle Data Guard, including setting thresholds, estimating potential data loss, and tracking redo apply rates.

NEW QUESTION # 96

Examine the following parameter settings of the physical standby database:

* STANDBY_FILE_MANAGEMENT=AUTO
* ENABLED_PDBS_ON_STANDBY=<null>

During which TWO tasks are files automatically created in the physical standby database after structure changes on the primary database?

- A. Adding or dropping a redo file group
- B. Renaming a data file in the primary database
- C. Performing transportable tablespaces
- D. Adding a data file or creating a tablespace
- E. Creating a PDB from the existing PDB within the same CDB

Answer: D,E

Explanation:

When STANDBY_FILE_MANAGEMENT is set to AUTO, the Oracle Data Guard automatically creates, deletes, and renames files on the standby database to match the changes made on the primary database. The tasks that lead to the automatic creation of files on the standby include:

Adding a data file or creating a tablespace (C): When a new tablespace is created or a new data file is added on the primary database, the standby database automatically replicates this action, maintaining structural consistency with the primary database. Creating a PDB from the existing PDB within the same CDB (D): Creating a new Pluggable Database (PDB) within a Multitenant Container Database (CDB) on the primary database triggers an automatic creation of the corresponding PDB within the standby CDB.

NEW QUESTION # 97

Which three are prerequisites for using Data Guard Broker?

- A. The broker configuration files for a RAC database must reside in shared storage accessible by all the RAC database instances.
- B. Network connectivity to the primary database instance must be defined on the servers hosting the standby database instances.
- C. If any database in the configuration is a RAC database, then the broker configuration files must reside in shared storage accessible by all database instances for all databases in the broker configuration.
- D. The primary and standby databases must run the same version of the Oracle Database server.
- E. DG_BROKEB_START must be set to TRUE for a database instance before adding the database to the broker configuration.
- F. A statically defined listener end-point must be registered with the local listener on the servers hosting the standby database instances.

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

Data Guard Broker is a management tool that simplifies the configuration, management, and monitoring of Data Guard environments.

The prerequisites for using Data Guard Broker include:

The primary and standby databases must run the same version of the Oracle Database server (A): This ensures compatibility between the primary and standby databases and enables seamless role transitions and data synchronization.

Network connectivity to the primary database instance must be defined on the servers hosting the standby database instances (B): Proper network connectivity is essential for communication between the primary and standby databases, allowing for the replication of data and the synchronization of changes.

If any database in the configuration is a RAC database, then the broker configuration files must reside in shared storage accessible by all database instances for all databases in the broker configuration (D): In Real Application Clusters (RAC) environments, shared storage ensures that all instances of the RAC database can access the broker configuration files, facilitating the management of the Data Guard environment across all instances.

NEW QUESTION # 98

Your Data Guard environment consists of these components and settings:

1. A primary database
2. Two remote physical standby databases
3. The redo transport mode is set to sync
4. Real-time query is enabled for both standby databases
5. The DB_BLOCK_CHECKING parameter is set to TRUE on both standby databases. You notice an increase in redo apply lag time on both standby databases.

Which two would you recommend to reduce the redo apply lag on the standby databases?

- A. Increase the size of the buffer cache on the physical standby database instances.
- B. Increase the size of standby redo log files on the standby databases.
- C. Lower DB_BLOCK_CHECKING to MEDIUM or low on the standby databases.
- D. Increase the number of standby redo log files on the standby databases.
- E. Decrease the redo log file size on the primary database.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

To reduce the redo apply lag on standby databases, one could increase the size of the standby redo log files.

Larger redo log files can accommodate more redo data, which may reduce the frequency of log switches and allow for more continuous application of redo data. Additionally, lowering the DB_BLOCK_CHECKING parameter to MEDIUM or LOW on the standby databases can help improve redo apply performance. High block checking can impose additional CPU overhead during the application of redo data, potentially increasing apply lag times. By reducing the level of block checking, you can lessen this overhead and help reduce the apply lag.

NEW QUESTION # 99

Active Data Guard (ADG) databases are widely used to offload reporting or ad hoc query-only jobs from the primary database. Reporting workload profile is different from the primary database and often requires tuning.

Which tool is used to tune SQL workloads running on an ADG database?

- A. In-Memory Active Session History (ASH)
- B. Standby Statspack
- C. Automatic Diagnostic Database Monitor (ADDM)
- D. SQL Tuning Advisor
- E. Automatic Workload Repository (AWR)

Answer: E

Explanation:

AWR collects, processes, and maintains performance statistics for problem detection and self-tuning purposes.

In an Active Data Guard environment, where the physical standby database can be used for read-only workloads, AWR can be instrumental in identifying performance bottlenecks and areas for optimization. It provides detailed reports that include wait events, time model statistics, and active session history, making it an invaluable tool for tuning SQL queries and overall database performance in an ADG setup.
