NEW QUESTION # 26

Which of the following is not a common weakness of packet filtering firewalls?

- A. Limited logging functionality.
- B. Vulnerability to denial-of-service and related attacks.
- C. Vulnerability to IP spoofing.
- D. No support for advanced user authentication schemes.

Answer: B

Explanation:

An important point with packet filtering firewalls is their speed and flexibility, as well as capacity to block some denial-of-service and related attacks, makes them ideal for placement at the outermost boundary with an untrusted network.

Other choices represent weaknesses of packet filtering firewalls.

NEW QUESTION # 29

By examining the "state" and "context" of the incoming data packets, it helps to track the protocols that are considered "connectionless", such as UDP-based applications and Remote Procedure Calls (RPC). This type of firewall system is used in?

- A. Third generation firewall systems.
- B. Fourth generation firewall systems.
- C. First generation firewall systems.
- D. Second generation firewall systems.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Stateful inspection is a third generation firewall technology designed to be aware of, and inspect, not only the information being received, but the dynamic connection and transmission state of the information being received. Control decisions are made by analyzing and utilizing the following: Communication Information, Communication derived state, Application derived state and information manipulation. Here are some characteristics of Stateful Inspection technology on Firewalls:

Scan information from all layers in the packet.

Save state information derived from previous communications, such as the outgoing Port command of an FTP session, so that incoming data communication can be verified against it.

Provides tracking support for connectionless protocols through the use of session state databases.

Allow state information derived from other applications access through the firewall for authorized services only, such as previously authenticated users.

Evaluate and manipulate flexible expressions based on communication and application derived state information.
