Microsoft Administering Relational Databases on Microsoft Azure Sample Questions (Q288-Q293):

NEW QUESTION # 288

Task 1

In an Azure SQL database named db1, you need to enable page compression on the PK_SalesOrderHeader_SalesOrderID clustered index of the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table.

Answer:

Explanation:

See the explanation part for the complete Solution.

Explanation:

To enable page compression on the PK_SalesOrderHeader_SalesOrderID clustered index of the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table in db1, you can use the following Transact-SQL script:

```
-- Connect to the Azure SQL database named db1
```

```
USE db1;
```

```
GO
```

```
-- Enable page compression on the clustered index
```

```
ALTER INDEX PK_SalesOrderHeader_SalesOrderID ON SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader REBUILD WITH
```

```
(DATA_COMPRESSION = PAGE); GO
```

This script will rebuild the clustered index with page compression, which can reduce the storage space and improve the query performance. The script solution consists of three parts:

* The first part is USE db1; GO. This part connects to the Azure SQL database named db1, where the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table is located. The GO command separates the batches of Transact-SQL statements and sends them to the server.

* The second part is ALTER INDEX PK_SalesOrderHeader_SalesOrderID ON SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader REBUILD WITH (DATA_COMPRESSION = PAGE); GO. This part enables page compression on the clustered index named PK_SalesOrderHeader_SalesOrderID, which is defined on the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table. The ALTER INDEX statement modifies the properties of an existing index. The REBUILD option rebuilds the index from scratch, which is required to change the compression setting. The DATA_COMPRESSION = PAGE option specifies that page compression is applied to the index, which means that both row and prefix compression are used. Page compression can reduce the storage space and improve the query performance by compressing the data at the page level. The GO command ends the batch of statements.

* The third part is optional, but it can be useful to verify the compression status of the index. It is SELECT name, index_id, data_compression_desc FROM sys.indexes WHERE object_id = OBJECT_ID('SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader');. This part queries the sys.indexes catalog view, which contains information about the indexes in the database. The SELECT statement returns the name, index_id, and data_compression_desc columns for the indexes that belong to the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table. The OBJECT_ID function returns the object identification number for the table name. The data_compression_desc column shows the compression type of the index, which should be PAGE for the clustered index after the script is executed.

These are the steps of the script solution for enabling page compression on the clustered index of the SalesLT.SalesOrderHeader table in db1.

NEW QUESTION # 289

You need to design an analytical storage solution for the transactional data. The solution must meet the sales transaction dataset requirements.

What should you include in the solution? To answer, select the appropriate options in the answer area.

NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point.

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:

Graphical user interface, text, application Description automatically generated

Box 1: Hash

Scenario:

Ensure that queries joining and filtering sales transaction records based on product ID complete as quickly as possible.

A hash distributed table can deliver the highest query performance for joins and aggregations on large tables.

Box 2: Round-robin

Scenario:

You plan to create a promotional table that will contain a promotion ID. The promotion ID will be associated to a specific product. The product will be identified by a product ID. The table will be approximately 5 GB.

A round-robin table is the most straightforward table to create and delivers fast performance when used as a staging table for loads.

These are some scenarios where you should choose Round robin distribution:

* When you cannot identify a single key to distribute your data.

* If your data doesn't frequently join with data from other tables.

* When there are no obvious keys to join.
