NEW QUESTION # 456
Which of the following BEST describes a pay-as-you-go licensing model within a cloud service?

- A. Enterprise agreement
- B. Promotional agreement
- C. Perpetual agreement
- D. Subscription agreement

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 457
A company wants to process a batch job in a faster, cost-effective manner. Which of the following is the BEST solution?

- A. Increase CPU usage.
- B. Implement right-sizing.
- C. Utilize spot instances.
- D. Add storage.

Answer: C

Explanation:
Spot instances are cloud computing resources that are available at a lower price than the regular on-demand price, but can be interrupted and reclaimed by the cloud provider at any time1. Spot instances are ideal for batch jobs that have flexible completion times and can tolerate failures, as they can provide faster and cheaper computing power than regular instances2. Spot instances can also be combined with other pricing options, such as on-demand or reserved instances, to optimize the performance and cost of batch jobs3.
Implementing right-sizing is a technique of adjusting the size and type of cloud resources to match the actual needs and usage patterns of an application4. Right-sizing can help reduce the cost and improve the efficiency of cloud resources, but it does not necessarily make the batch job faster, as it depends on the workload and demand of the job.
Increasing CPU usage is a measure of how much processing power is being consumed by an application or a system. Increasing CPU usage can make the batch job faster, but it can also increase the cost and risk of overloading the system. Increasing CPU usage is not a solution by itself, but rather a consequence of using more or larger cloud resources.
Adding storage is a process of increasing the amount or capacity of data that can be stored in the cloud. Adding storage can help store more data or backup data for the batch job, but it does not directly affect the speed or cost of the batch job, as it depends on the type and performance of the storage service. NEW QUESTION # 459
Which of the following policies is MOST critical for being in compliance with regulatory agencies?

- A. Department-specific
- B. Incident response
- C. Change management
- D. Communication

Answer: B

Explanation:
Incident response is the policy that defines how an organization responds to a security breach or cyberattack that affects its data, systems, or operations. It is most critical for being in compliance with regulatory agencies because it helps to minimize the impact of the incident, preserve the evidence, and restore the normal operations as soon as possible. Regulatory agencies often require organizations to report any incidents that compromise the confidentiality, integrity, or availability of the data they handle, especially if it involves personal or sensitive information.
Failure to comply with these reporting obligations can result in fines, penalties, or legal actions.
Therefore, having an effective incident response policy is essential for ensuring compliance and protecting the reputation of the organization.

NEW QUESTION # 460
A company wants to analyze the results of an email marketing campaign. The company identified different information sources it can use in combination with its current databases. It also contacted the CSP to use its solutions to ingest, transform, and process the information. Which of the following is the company implementing?

- A. Big Data
- B. IoT
- C. Social media
- D. Blockchain

Answer: A

Explanation:
Big data is a term that describes the large and diverse datasets that are generated from various sources at high speed and require advanced analytics techniques to process and extract value from them. Big data can help organizations gain insights, uncover patterns, and make informed decisions.
The company is implementing big data because it is using different information sources in combination with its current databases, which implies that the data is large in volume and variety.
The company is also using the CSP's solutions to ingest, transform, and process the information, which implies that the data is high in velocity and requires specialized tools and frameworks to handle it. The company is using big data analytics to analyze the results of its email marketing campaign, which can help it understand the effectiveness, impact, and return on investment of its marketing strategy.
