NEW QUESTION # 94

Which type of analytics will trigger the alert on the image shown?

- A. Behavioral
- B. Baseline
- C. Contextual
- D. Anomaly

Answer: D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

The correct answer is D - Anomaly.

In Cortex XSIAM, Anomaly analytics are designed to trigger alerts when a monitored activity deviates significantly from the established baseline or historical average. In the image, the "Failed login by non-existent users on host" metric remains at zero for several days and then suddenly spikes to 267 and 381—far above the average threshold. This significant deviation from the established norm is identified by the analytics engine as an anomaly and will trigger an alert for further investigation.

"Anomaly analytics identify significant deviations from established baselines or averages, such as unusual spikes in failed login attempts or other behavioral outliers, and trigger alerts for potential threats." Which built-in incident domain will be assigned to these alerts and incidents in Cortex XSIAM?

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is D - IT.

Alerts and incidents related to internal vulnerability scanning and other non-security operational events are categorized under the IT domain in Cortex XSIAM. This allows teams to differentiate between security-related and IT operations-related alerts for better incident management and prioritization.

"Incidents generated from internal IT operations, such as vulnerability scanning, are assigned to the IT domain, separating them from security-focused domains." Document Reference: XSIAM Analyst ILT Lab Guide.pdf Page: Page 28 (Alerting and Detection Processes section)
