NEW QUESTION # 55

Your company has multiple offices around the world, each of which has its own detail page on the company website. Offices will be added regularly by the content maintenance team, with each office assigned to one of a limited number of global regions. You've been asked to create a directory page listing all of these offices, grouped by region. In order to keep the list of regions small, you've been asked to make sure that only site administrators can create, modify, or delete regions.

What kind of Drupal content architecture would best support this?

- A. Create an "Office" content type and a "Region" content type. The "Region" content type includes a node reference field that can contain multiple office nodes.
- B. Create a "Regions" taxonomy vocabulary. Each office is a "Basic page" node, assigned to its region using a term reference field added to the "Basic page" content type.
- C. Create an "Office" content type and a "Regions" taxonomy vocabulary. Office nodes are assigned to regions using a term reference field on the "Office" content type

- D. Each office is a "Basic page" node The office's regional location should be listed in the node's body text

Answer: A
