NEW QUESTION # 102

Cloud Kicks needs to automate several updates to lead records and update unrelated records. Select changes should happen every time a record is created or updated, Put other changes should only happen when the record is updated.
Which two options should the administrator use to automate these updates?
Choose 2 answers

- A. Create a flow that runs when a record is created or updated.
- B. Use a Decision element with the "Only if the record that triggered the flow to run is updated to meet the condition requirements" option.
- C. Use "formula evaluates to true" workflow rule with the ISCHANCEO function to make changes when the record is updated.
- D. Create a Process Builder that runs when a record is changed.

Answer: A,D

Explanation:

Process Builder and Flow Builder are tools that allow administrators to automate business processes in Salesforce without writing code. Process Builder and Flow Builder can perform actions such as creating records, updating fields, sending emails, posting to Chatter, invoking Apex classes, calling flows, etc.

To automate several updates to lead records and update unrelated records at Cloud Kicks, an administrator can use two options:
* B) Create a Process Builder that runs when a record is changed

Process Builder is a tool that allows administrators to create processes that consist of criteria nodes and action groups. Criteria nodes define the conditions that trigger the process and action groups define the actions that the process performs. Processes can run when a record is created or when a record is created or edited.

By creating a Process Builder that runs when a record is changed, an administrator can automate updates to lead records based on certain criteria and perform actions such as updating fields, sending emails, posting to Chatter, invoking Apex classes, calling flows, etc. References:

* C) Create a flow that runs when a record is created or updated

Flow Builder is a tool that allows administrators to create flows that consist of elements such as screens, assignments, decisions, loops, etc. Elements define the logic and user interface of the flow. Flows can run in different ways such as when a user clicks a button, when a record is updated by Process Builder, when an event occurs in the system (such as record creation), etc.

NEW QUESTION # 103

What permission would you need to locate duplicate records that you do not own in a custom object?

- A. Delete
- B. View All Data
- C. Merge
- D. Read, Edit

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 104

The administrator at Cloud Kicks created a flow in a sandbox that walks service agents through the Return Merchandise Authorization creation process. The administrator deployed the flow to production with a Change Set. Users are unable to use the flow in production.

Which step should the administrator take?

Activate the flow administrator take?

- A. Ensure there is an active flow version in the sandbox.
- B. Include the active and prior inactive flow version in the Change Set.
- C. Deployment the flow, with the Metadata API instead of Change Sets
- D. Activate the flow manually after deployment.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

A flow is an automation tool that allows you to create processes that perform actions based on user input or record changes. A flow can be triggered by a user who launches it from a button, link, or Lightning page, or by the system when a record is created or updated. A flow has different versions that can be active or inactive. An active version is the one that runs when the flow is triggered, while an inactive version is the one that is saved but not running. When you deploy a flow to production with a change set, the flow version is deployed as inactive by default. This means that you need to activate the flow manually after deployment if you want it to run in production.
