ASQ Certified Manager of Quality/Organizational Excellence Exam Sample Questions (Q162-Q167):

NEW QUESTION # 162

A system that is designed to ensure that procedures are current, properly authorized, and accessible is known as document

- A. imaging
- B. audit
- C. cross-linking
- D. control

Answer: D

Explanation:

Document control is a critical aspect of a quality management system. It ensures that important documents, such as procedures, work instructions, and policies, are kept up-to-date and are available to personnel who need them. This process helps in maintaining consistency, preventing errors, and ensuring that all activities are performed based on the most current and authorized information. It typically involves stages such as document creation, review, approval, distribution, retrieval, retention, and disposal.

: While I cannot directly verify the answer from the ASQ documentation, the concept of document control is widely recognized in various quality management standards, such as ISO 9001, which outlines the criteria for a quality management system and is one of the standards that the ASQ Certified Manager Of Quality /Organizational Excellence Body of Knowledge references.

NEW QUESTION # 163

A company that distributes merchandise to major retail stores is conducting a customer satisfaction survey. The major problem with limiting those interviews to individuals in the company's sales contact list is that the list may not include potential new customers.

- A. include only purchasing agents and buyers
- B. contain out-of-date information
- C. include customers that have stopped purchasing from the company

Answer: A

Explanation:

Conducting a customer satisfaction survey is essential for understanding customer needs, identifying areas for improvement, and enhancing overall organizational performance. However, when interviews are limited to individuals on the company's existing sales contact list, several limitations arise:

* Exclusion of Potential New Customers: The sales contact list typically includes existing customers or those who have previously interacted with the company. By relying solely on this list, the organization misses out on valuable insights from potential new customers who have not yet engaged with the company's products or services. These new customers may have different perspectives and expectations, which are crucial for improving overall customer satisfaction.

* Bias Toward Purchasing Agents and Buyers: If the list primarily includes purchasing agents and buyers, the survey results may be skewed toward the purchasing process and transactional aspects. While these stakeholders are important, other customer segments (such as end-users, influencers, or decision-makers) may have different experiences and feedback. Limiting the survey to this group may overlook critical insights from other customer roles.

* Exclusion of Dissatisfied or Lapsed Customers: The sales contact list may not capture customers who have stopped purchasing from the company or those who had negative experiences. By excluding these individuals, the organization misses an opportunity to understand the reasons behind customer attrition and identify areas for improvement. Insights from dissatisfied or lapsed customers are valuable for enhancing overall satisfaction and retention.

* Outdated Information: Over time, contact lists become outdated due to changes in personnel, job roles, or organizational structures. If the list contains obsolete or incorrect information, the survey may miss relevant stakeholders or fail to reach the intended audience. Outdated data can lead to biased results and inaccurate conclusions.

In summary, relying solely on the company's sales contact list for customer satisfaction surveys can limit the scope, introduce bias, and hinder the organization's ability to gather comprehensive insights. To address this limitation, organizations should consider supplementing the list with additional sources (such as leads, inquiries, or potential customers) and periodically update their contact databases.

NEW QUESTION # 164

In order to manage the needs of multiple customers, the management group should first

- A. develop and perform a needs assessment for each customer
- B. develop custom tailored, independent systems to meet the needs of each customer
- C. develop cost effective processes that meet the needs for the majority of customers
- D. develop standardized processes that will treat all customers the same

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 165

Which of the following is the first activity required in strategic planning for quality training?

- A. Select the instructional strategies
- B. Identify the organization's needs
- C. Identify the learners' needs
- D. Specify job performance

Answer: B

Explanation:

The first activity in strategic planning for quality training is to identify the organization's needs. This involves understanding the strategic direction of the organization and aligning the training objectives with the organizational goals and objectives. It is essential to determine what skills, knowledge, and competencies are required to achieve the organization's strategic goals, which will then guide the identification of learners' needs and the selection of appropriate instructional strategies.

NEW QUESTION # 166

A company has entered into a partnership with a key supplier. All other sources for this key component have been eliminated. An auditor reports that the qualifying audit done by the previous auditor contained a significant omission. In this situation, the quality manager should do which of the following first?

- A. Issue a stop-work order to prevent further impact to the organization
- B. Inform the supplier of the problem
- C. Assess the impact of the auditor's omission
- D. Inform the chief executive officer of the omission

Answer: C

Explanation:

When faced with a significant omission in a qualifying audit, the quality manager's initial step should be to evaluate the impact. This assessment involves considering the potential risks, implications for the organization, and the severity of the omission. Once the impact is understood, the manager can make informed decisions about how to proceed. While informing the supplier and the chief executive officer are important steps, they should follow the assessment of the situation.
