Introducing a Q2 Response

The first sentence of your introduction to your Q2 response should address the specific topic in the task, develop an interpretation and do this through the framework of a critical lens. The example below is responding to the key word 'control' and develops a Marxist interpretation of the text:

Develop an overall interpretation of the text in response to the key word in the Q2 task	Present the interpretation through the framework of a critical lens or theory
Bram Stoker's Dracula represents and ultimately indicts the material power and control	of the bourgeoisie - embodied by the novel's protagonist - to control and commodify people.

Since the Q2 task asks you to discuss how an idea is "endorsed, challenged or marginalised by the text", you should use one of the words or a synonym to present your interpretation. Try writing a first sentence for a Q2 response now. Use one of the words from the list below to introduce an interpretation. Use words from one of the critical theory vocabulary lists (pages 21-29) to frame your interpretation.

Endorses	Challenges	Marginalises
celebrates exalts idealises romanticises conveys the importance of represents the profound impact of illustrates the meaning of	subverts criticises condemns decries probes interrogates exposes reveals disrupts indicts	silences erases excludes overlooks obscures renders invisible fails to represent

The second or third sentence of your introduction (it only needs to be two sentences but can be longer) should follow on from the first by identifying an aspect or elements of the passage that will be used as a basis for developing this interpretation and the text as a whole as is demonstrated by the below example:

First sentence:	Bram Stoker's Dracula represents and ultimately indicts the material power of the bourgeoisie - embodied by the novel's protagonist - to control and commodify people.
Second sentence:	As Dracula exerts his capitalist authority, individuals around him lose their humanity and fail to realise consciousness where they accept their exploitation at his hands.

NEW QUESTION # 47

For linings that use a surface layer of refractory plastic or a ramming mix, when should trimming, jointing, and venting be done?

- A. After water curing for 24 hours
- B. After the entire installation is complete
- C. Never; these steps are not required when refractory plastics or ramming mixes are used
- D. Before stopping work for the day or shift

Answer: D

Explanation:

When using refractory plastics or ramming mixes, it is critical that trimming, jointing, and venting be performed before stopping work for the day or shift. API 936 and TR 980 specify that proper surface preparation helps relieve vapor pressure during dryout and prevents cracking. If these steps are postponed, the surface may dry unevenly or set improperly, complicating the subsequent installation and reducing bond quality between layers.

Venting paths are particularly important in thick plastic or ramming layers where moisture may be trapped, and jointing ensures layer-to-layer continuity. Trimming also smooths out inconsistencies and aligns the lining to specifications.

Reference:

API TR 980 - Section "Refractory Plastics and Ramming Mixes: Trimming, Jointing, and Venting" requires these actions be done prior to any interruption of installation work.

NEW QUESTION # 48

NEW QUESTION # 49

Which of the following is the appropriate term for testing refractory that was sampled during project site installation in order to confirm that it meets specified physical property standards?

- A. As-installed testing
- B. Visual testing
- C. Pre-qualification testing
- D. Hammer testing

Answer: A

Explanation:

API 936 defines different testing phases for monolithic refractories. As-installed testing refers specifically to the testing of materials that have been installed and cured on site:

"As-installed testing is performed on specimens sampled from the job site and subjected to prescribed laboratory testing to confirm compliance with physical property specifications."

- API Std 936, Section 6.4.7

This is distinct from:

Pre-qualification testing (done before installation),

Hammer testing (a nondestructive field check), and

Visual testing (a general inspection technique).

Thus, the correct term is Option C - As-installed testing.
