NEW QUESTION # 90

Which technology is used by vectoring to cancel inter-VDSL2 line crosstalk in downstream?

- A. Cancellor
- B. Pre-coder
- C. fdps
- D. Postponed

Answer: B

Explanation:

* Vectoring in VDSL2 :

* Vectoring is a technology used to mitigate crosstalk (interference between adjacent copper lines) in VDSL2 systems, improving data rates and stability.

* Crosstalk occurs when signals from one line interfere with signals on another line, especially in bundled copper cables.

* Pre-coder Technology :

* Pre-coding is a key technique used in vectoring for downstream transmission.

* It works by pre-distorting the transmitted signal at the DSLAM (Digital Subscriber Line Access Multiplexer) to cancel out the expected crosstalk at the receiver (CPE).

* This ensures that the received signal at each CPE is free from interference caused by other lines.

* Other Options :

* fdps : Not a recognized term in the context of vectoring or VDSL2.

* Cancellor : While cancellation is part of vectoring, the specific term "Cancellor" is not used in this context.

* Postponed : This is unrelated to vectoring or crosstalk mitigation.

* Why C?

* Pre-coding is the correct technology used in vectoring to cancel downstream crosstalk in VDSL2.

Thus, the correct answer is C .
