Which service method should be overridden in order to allow "without sharing" queries?

- A. `ccrz.ccService.initSVCDAO()`
- B. `ccrz.ccService.query()`
- C. `ccrz.ccService.queryWithoutSharing()`
- D. `ccrz.ccAPI.queryService()`

Answer: A

Explanation:

The service method that should be overridden in order to allow "without sharing" queries is `ccrz.ccService.initSVCDAO`. This method is responsible for initializing the service data access object (SVCDAO) that is used by the service class to perform queries. By overriding this method, the user can specify the sharing mode of the SVCDAO, which will determine whether the queries respect or ignore the sharing rules of the current user. For example, `ccrz.ccService.initSVCDAO(ccrz.ccAPI.SZ_WITHOUTSHARING)` will initialize the SVCDAO with the without sharing mode. The logging token can be enabled by setting the value of `CO.logToken` to true in CCAdmin.

Enabling debugging options for the current user and visually inspecting the Salesforce debug logs. This will enable logging messages and errors to the Salesforce debug logs, which can be viewed by opening the Debug Logs page in Salesforce Setup. The debugging options can be enabled by creating a Debug Level and a Trace Flag for the current user in Salesforce Setup.

Logging into the community as a system administrator to identify any potential permissions or Visualforce exceptions. This will allow viewing any errors or warnings that may occur on the community pages due to insufficient permissions or Visualforce issues. The system administrator can also access CCAdmin and other tools from within the community. Salesforce Reference: B2B Commerce and D2C Commerce Developer Guide, Logging, Debug Your Code

The current effective account is the account that the user is currently acting on behalf of, which can be different from the user's own account. The component does not show orders placed in other storefronts or related to other accounts, even if the user has access to them.
