NEW QUESTION # 91

A medical team recommends a tracheostomy for an infant with spinal muscular atrophy. The parent states, "I just want to make sure my child has the best life." The nurse should:

- A. Offer reassurance to the parent
- B. Obtain a palliative care consult
- C. Provide education about the procedure
- D. Notify the medical team

Answer: B

Explanation:

This statement reflects emotional and existential distress rather than a purely educational need. A palliative care consult is appropriate to provide holistic support, clarify goals of care, and ensure that the family's values and quality-of-life concerns are addressed within a multidisciplinary approach.

"Palliative care is appropriate when families face complex, life-altering decisions. It supports communication, decision-making, and emotional well-being alongside curative or life-sustaining treatments." (Referenced from CCRN Pediatric - Professional Caring and Ethical Practice: Palliative Care and Family-Centered Decision-Making)

NEW QUESTION # 92

A child is admitted following chest trauma, and a small pneumothorax (less than 10%) is noted. A nurse should anticipate which of the following?

- A. Incentive spirometry
- B. Observation
- C. Chest percussion
- D. Chest tube insertion

Answer: B

Explanation:

Small pneumothoraces (<10%) are often managed conservatively in hemodynamically stable pediatric patients. The body's natural reabsorption of intrapleural air typically resolves the condition without invasive intervention, provided that the patient is monitored closely.

"Observation is appropriate for small pneumothoraces (less than 10%) in stable pediatric patients. Serial chest radiographs and clinical assessments are used to monitor for progression. Chest tube insertion is generally reserved for larger or symptomatic pneumothoraces." (Referenced from CCRN Pediatric - Direct Care: Pulmonary Trauma and Chest Injury)
