NEW QUESTION # 57

- A. The yield
- B. The amount payable on maturity
- C. The nominal value
- D. The coupon rate
- E. The market value

NEW QUESTION # 58

A company currently has a 5.25% fixed rate loan but it wishes to change the interest style of the loan to variable by using an interest rate swap directly with the bank.

The bank has quoted the following swap rate:

* 4.50% - 4.55% in exchange for Libor

Libor is currently 4%.

If the company enters into the swap and Libor remains at 4%. what will the company's interest cost be?

- A. 4.70%
- B. 4.00%
- C. 4.75%
- D. 5.25%

Answer: C

Explanation:

A company has a 5.25% fixed-rate loan and wants to swap it to variable using a swap quoted:

4.50% - 4.55% in exchange for Libor

(Libor currently 4%)

To turn its fixed loan into a synthetic floating-rate loan, the company needs to:

Receive fixed (to offset part of the 5.25% it pays on the loan), and

Pay Libor (to end up with variable cost).

From the swap quote, if the company wants to receive fixed, it gets the lower rate: 4.50% (the bank's bid rate).

Cash flows:

Pay 5.25% fixed on the loan

Receive 4.50% fixed on the swap

Pay Libor (4.00%) on the swap

Net cost:

$5.25\% - 4.50\% + 4.00\% = 0.75\% + 4.00\% = 4.75\%$

$5.25\% - 4.50\% + 4.00\% = 0.75\% + 4.00\% = 4.75\%$

Answer to Q28: B. 4.75%

NEW QUESTION # 60

A company plans to cut its dividend but is concerned that the share price will fall. This demonstrates the _____

Answer:

Explanation:

effect

Signalling effect (information content of dividends) In CIMA F3, dividend policy is closely linked to information asymmetry between a company's management and its shareholders.

Managers typically have better information about the firm's future prospects than external investors. As a result, investors often interpret changes in dividends as signals about management's expectations of future earnings and cash flows.

The concern that cutting dividends will cause the share price to fall illustrates the signalling effect (also known as dividend signalling theory). According to this theory, a dividend cut is interpreted by the market as a negative signal, suggesting that management expects lower future profits or cash flow difficulties. Investors react by revising their expectations downward, leading to a fall in the share price. CIMA F3 study guidance contrasts this with Modigliani and Miller's dividend irrelevance theory, which assumes perfect markets and no information asymmetry. In reality, markets are imperfect, and dividends convey information. Therefore, companies are often reluctant to reduce dividends even when it may be financially prudent, due to fear of adverse market reactions. This behaviour is also linked to dividend stability, another key concept in F3, where firms prefer stable or gradually increasing dividends to avoid sending negative signals to investors.
