NEW QUESTION # 45
How is a macro referenced in a search?

- A. By enclosing the macro name in single-quote characters (').
- B. By using the macro command.
- C. By enclosing the macro name in backtick characters (').
- D. By using the macroname command.

Answer: C

Explanation:
The correct answer is C. By enclosing the macro name in backtick characters (`).
A macro is a way to reuse a piece of SPL code in different searches. A macro can take arguments, which are variables that can be replaced by different values when the macro is called. A macro can also contain another macro within it, which is called a nested macro1.
To reference a macro in a search, you need to enclose the macro name in backtick characters (). For example, if you have a macro namedmy_macro` that takes one argument, you can reference it in a search by using the following syntax:
|my_macro(argument)| ...
This will replace the macro name and argument with the SPL code contained in the macro definition. For example, if the macro definition is:
[my_macro(argument)] search sourcetype=$argument$
And you reference it in a search with:
index=main |my_macro(web)| stats count by host
This will expand the macro and run the following SPL code:
index=main | search sourcetype=web | stats count by host References:
Use search macros in searches

NEW QUESTION # 46
What is the relationship between data models and pivots?

- A. Data models provide the datasets for pivots.
- B. Pivots and data models have no relationship.
- C. Pivots and data models are the same thing.
- D. Pivots provide the datasets for data models.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The relationship between data models and pivots is that data models provide the datasets for pivots. Data models are collections of datasets that represent your data in a structured and hierarchical way. Data models define how your data is organized into objects and fields. Pivots are user interfaces that allow you to create data visualizations that present different aspects of a data model. Pivots let you select options from menus and forms to create charts, tables, maps, etc., without writing any SPL code. Pivots use datasets from data models as their source of data. Pivots and data models are not the same thing, as pivots are tools for visualizing data models. Pivots do not provide datasets for data models, but rather use them as inputs.

Therefore, only statement A is true about the relationship between data models and pivots.
