The Open Group TOGAF Business Architecture Foundation Exam Sample Questions (Q112-Q117):

NEW QUESTION # 112

Complete the sentence An information map is a _____.

- A. target description of information assets needed to support the business
- B. representation of where the business information is held within the enterprise
- C. description of the business units that use capabilities and participate in value streams
- D. collection of information concepts and their relationships to one another

Answer: D

Explanation:

An information map is essentially a collection of information concepts along with their relationships. It's a visual representation that shows how various types of information are related and used throughout the organization. This can include data entities, their attributes, and the flow of data between different business processes or systems. Information mapping helps in understanding the structure of an organization's data and is a key part of the information system architecture within TOGAF's content framework.

NEW QUESTION # 113

What component of the Architecture Repository is an architectural representation of SBBs supporting the Architecture Landscape?

- A. Solutions Library
- B. Solutions Repository
- C. Solutions Landscape
- D. Solutions Continuum

Answer: D

Explanation:

In the context of the TOGAF Architecture Repository, the Solutions Continuum represents an architectural representation of Solution Building Blocks (SBBs) supporting the Architecture Landscape. It provides a view of the available and implemented solutions that can be used or adapted for new initiatives.

NEW QUESTION # 114

Which of the following best describes this diagram?

- A. Business Capability/Value Stream Mapping
- B. Business Relationships diagram
- C. Business Capabilities Layer diagram
- D. Business Capability Map

Answer: D

Explanation:

The diagram presented is best described as a Business Capability Map. Here's a detailed explanation:

Business Capability Map:

Definition: A Business Capability Map represents the various capabilities an organization requires to deliver its products and services and achieve its strategic objectives. It typically categorizes capabilities into different levels or tiers, such as strategic, core, and supporting capabilities.

Diagram Analysis:

Layers and Groupings: The diagram shows capabilities grouped into three categories: Strategic, Core, and Supporting. Each group lists specific business capabilities necessary for the organization's functioning.

Color Coding: The use of different colors (green, red, yellow, purple) may indicate various aspects such as priority, status, or different business units. However, the primary purpose is to visually represent and categorize capabilities.

TOGAF Reference:

Phase B: Business Architecture: In this phase, creating a Business Capability Map is a crucial activity. It helps in understanding the business functions and aligning them with strategic goals.

Capability-Based Planning: TOGAF promotes capability-based planning, which involves identifying, mapping, and analyzing business capabilities to ensure they support the overall strategy and objectives.

Purpose and Benefits:

Strategic Alignment: The Business Capability Map helps in aligning business capabilities with the strategic objectives of the organization. It provides a clear view of what the organization needs to do to achieve its goals.

Gap Analysis: It is useful for conducting gap analysis by comparing current capabilities with the desired state, helping to identify areas for improvement.

Resource Allocation: By understanding the different capabilities, organizations can allocate resources more effectively to areas that need development or enhancement.

In summary, the diagram is best described as a Business Capability Map because it visually represents and categorizes the various capabilities needed by the organization into strategic, core, and supporting layers, aligning them with the business strategy and objectives.
