IBM MQ v9.4 Administrator - Professional Sample Questions (Q37-Q42):

NEW QUESTION # 37

An organization is designing a financial transaction processing system using IBM MQ where multiple related updates such as account debit, credit, and logging must either all succeed or all fail as a single unit. Which IBM MQ capability ensures atomicity and consistency of these operations across different queues and resources?

- A. XA-compliant two-phase commit transactions
- B. Publish/subscribe model for message delivery
- C. Priority-based message ordering
- D. Persistent local queues with retry mechanisms

Answer: A

Explanation:

IBM MQ supports XA-compliant two-phase commit transactions, ensuring atomic operations across multiple queues and resources in financial or critical systems.

NEW QUESTION # 38

In IBM MQ, which scenario correctly explains the handling of backout queues, including how the backout count is tracked, how repeated message processing failures are redirected, and how administrators can configure backout thresholds to prevent endless retry loops?

- A. Backout queues store messages that repeatedly fail processing after exceeding a configured backout threshold, with the backout count incremented on each failure
- B. Backout queues automatically delete failed messages
- C. Backout queues require manual intervention for every message
- D. Backout queues are used for normal message routing

Answer: A

Explanation:

Backout queues capture messages that cannot be processed successfully after multiple attempts. The backout count tracks retries, and thresholds help prevent infinite loops while allowing administrators to troubleshoot failed messages.

NEW QUESTION # 39

In IBM MQ publish/subscribe model, when a subscriber wants to receive retained messages published before it connected, which subscription attribute must be configured to ensure the subscriber gets both past and future publications?

- A. Non-Durable Subscription
- B. Temporary Subscription
- C. Retained Publication Option
- D. Durable Subscription

Answer: D

A Durable Subscription allows subscribers to continue receiving publications, even for messages published when they were disconnected, ensuring continuity in pub/sub systems.
