NEW QUESTION # 241
A spoofed identity was detected for a digital certificate. Which of the following are the type of unidentified key and the certificate mat could be in use on the company domain?

- A. Public key and expired certificate
- B. Public key and wildcard certificate
- C. Private key and self-signed certificate
- D. Private key and root certificate

Answer: C

Explanation:
A self-signed certificate is a certificate that is signed by its own private key rather than by a trusted certificate authority (CA). This means that the authenticity of the certificate relies solely on the issuer's own authority. If a spoofed identity was detected, it could indicate that a private key associated with a self-signed certificate was compromised. Self-signed certificates are often used internally within organizations, but they carry higher risks since they are not validated by a third-party CA, making them more susceptible to spoofing.

Jailbreaking allows users to install unauthorized applications, modify system settings, and access root privileges.
