- B. All of the above
- C. changing buying and selling processes and tools
- D. developing and integrated supply chain

NEW QUESTION # 110

Upon receipt of owner-furnished property, the seller is responsible and accountable for the property as prescribed by the terms of the contract. This responsibility and accountability is called _____.

- A. contract administration
- B. property administration
- C. property accountability
- D. property control

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is C (property accountability) because, according to NCMA Contract Management Body of Knowledge (CMBOK), property accountability refers to the obligation of a contractor (seller) to properly manage, safeguard, track, and report government- or owner-furnished property in accordance with contract terms.

When the buyer provides property—often referred to as government-furnished property (GFP) or owner-furnished property—the contractor assumes responsibility for its custody, use, maintenance, and disposition

. Property accountability ensures that the contractor can accurately account for the location, condition, and usage of such property at all times. This includes maintaining records, preventing loss or damage, and complying with audit and reporting requirements.

Option A (property administration) refers more broadly to the oversight and management functions performed by the buyer or designated administrator, not the contractor's responsibility. Option B (property control) is related but narrower, focusing on physical control measures rather than the full scope of accountability. Option D (contract administration) is a broader term encompassing all post-award management activities.

CMBOK emphasizes that effective property accountability is critical in the post-award phase to ensure compliance, minimize risk of loss or misuse, and maintain transparency. Failure to properly account for furnished property can lead to financial liability, audit findings, and potential contractual disputes.
