Explanation

Two-way communication is a type of communication that allows for feedback, interaction, and dialogue between the sender and the receiver. Two-way communication is useful for engaging stakeholders, building trust and rapport, clarifying expectations, and resolving issues. Two-way communication encourages and increases people's motivation to interact to find out more, as they feel valued and involved in the change.

Therefore, statement 2 is true. However, two-way communication is not useful for getting important information out quickly to large groups of people, as it can be time-consuming, complex, and inconsistent. For this purpose, one-way communication, such as newsletters, emails, or announcements, may be more suitable.
