NEW QUESTION # 80
What is one way servant leaders can encourage team member personal growth?

- A. Assign development paths to team members based on their current skills
- B. Encourage spending more time in their role over formal learning
- C. Pair team members together to complete new or unique work
- D. Encourage team members to complete more work within areas in which they are comfortable

Answer: C

Explanation:
A servant leader empowers team members to grow by creating opportunities for learning and collaboration. One effective technique is to pair team members together to complete new or unique work. This practice promotes knowledge sharing, builds confidence, and helps develop T-shaped skills, which increase team flexibility and resilience.
Pairing fosters mentorship and shared ownership of outcomes, aligning with SAFe's emphasis on continuous learning culture and relentless improvement. Instead of assigning rigid development paths or confining people to comfort zones, servant leaders enable self-directed learning and encourage experimentation.
From SAFe guidance:
"Servant leaders grow others by providing opportunities for learning, pairing, and collaboration. They help individuals reach their potential by empowering them to take on new challenges." Therefore, the correct answer is A. Pair team members together to complete new or unique work, as this directly supports team member growth and a culture of learning.
