Relativity Certified Administrator Sample Questions (Q65-Q70):

NEW QUESTION # 65

When you export a Relativity application, what file type is used?

- A. TAR
- B. RAR
- C. ZIP
- D. RAP

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is D. RAP . Relativity's official application export documentation states that when you export an application, Relativity produces a RAP file . The documentation explicitly says that after the export completes, you can find the RAP file in the selected folder and then upload that file to the target workspace or Relativity instance for deployment. This is the standard application package format used by Relativity for moving custom or configured applications between environments.

This matters in case administration because administrators frequently manage applications across workspaces and instances, including exporting custom objects, views, layouts, scripts, event handlers, and other application components. Knowing that the package format is .rap is essential when promoting configurations between development, test, and production environments. The other options are generic archive formats that may be familiar in general computing, but they are not the official Relativity application package type.

Relativity also refers throughout its application installation and export documentation to installing or uploading .rap files , which reinforces that this is the correct and platform-specific answer. Therefore, from an RCA perspective, the correct answer is RAP , because that is the documented file type generated when a Relativity application is exported.

NEW QUESTION # 66

How can you update the Disable On Date field for multiple users?

- A. Add all users you wish to disable to the same group, then disable that group.
- B. Overlay a Disable On Date value via Import/Export.
- C. Use a mass operation to update the Disable On Date field.
- D. Set the Relativity Access date field individually when creating or editing the user.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is A. Use a mass operation to update the Disable On Date field. Relativity's Users documentation explicitly states that you can use a mass-operation to set the Disable On Date (UTC) field for multiple users . This is the exact documented method for updating that field across multiple user accounts at once.

The other options are not the documented answer for this workflow. Disabling a group is not the same thing as updating the Disable On Date field on user records. Overlay via Import/Export is not the method Relativity identifies for this task in the Users documentation. Setting the field individually works for a single user, but the question asks specifically about multiple users . Therefore, the correct answer is to use a mass operation to update the Disable On Date field.

NEW QUESTION # 67

- A. * "Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com

- B. * "Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com

* "Lin, David"
* David.Lin@example.com
* Ali.Devi@example.com
* Skylar
- C. * "Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com
* "Lin, David"
* David.Lin@example.com
* Ali.Devi@example.com
- D. * "Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com
* David.Lin@example.com
* Ali.Devi@example.com
* Dave Lin

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is C . Relativity's official Name Normalization documentation explains that the process parses the email headers -specifically From, To, Cc, and Bcc -to identify aliases. It does not create aliases from every casual name reference appearing in the email body. Relativity further states that when an alias appears in the format "Doe, John" john.doe@example.com , Name Normalization stores three aliases:

the full alias , the description/name portion , and the email address portion . Applying that exact documented rule here means the From value "Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com yields three aliases:

"Lin, David" David.Lin@example.com , "Lin, David" , and David.Lin@example.com . The To header contributes Ali.Devi@example.com .

Relativity also explicitly notes that generic aliases such as simple first names are not created in order to avoid over-merging. In addition, the alias-identification process is driven by the parsed header sections , not by every name or email string appearing in the message body. That means items such as Ali , Skylar , Rush Jones , rjones@domain.com , and Dave Lin are not the correct header-derived aliases for this example. The body text may help Relativity with segment matching in some contexts, but the direct alias list in this question comes from the email headers. Therefore, the correct identified aliases are the four listed in option C .

NEW QUESTION # 68

Which of these dtSearch queries would cause a syntax error on a search terms report STR?

- A. dog not cat
- B. dog or cat
- C. dog or not cat
- D. dog and not cat

Answer: A

Explanation:

The correct answer is B. dog not cat. Relativity's dtSearch syntax guidance explains that the NOT operator can be used by itself at the beginning of an expression, or in the middle of an expression only when combined with either AND or OR. Relativity gives examples such as apple OR NOT pear and applesauce and NOT pear as valid syntax. That means expressions like dog OR NOT cat and dog AND NOT cat are valid, while dog NOT cat is missing the required connector and therefore causes a syntax problem. Relativity's Search Terms Report error documentation further explains that STRs surface syntax errors when the search index cannot process the term because of invalid syntax. In this case, dog not cat violates the dtSearch operator rule, so it is the option most clearly expected to fail with a syntax error in a search terms report. Option A is a standard Boolean expression and is valid. Options C and D both include the required connector before NOT, which matches Relativity's documented dtSearch usage. Therefore, among the listed queries, dog not cat is the one that would cause a syntax error on an STR.

NEW QUESTION # 69

To what group does Relativity automatically add users that you create?

- A. Everyone
- B. Users are not automatically added to a group
- C. Domain Users
- D. All Users

Answer: A

Explanation:

The correct answer is A. Everyone . Relativity's official instance security documentation states that all users in any instance of Relativity are members of the Everyone group . This means that when a user account is created, that user is automatically part of the built-in Everyone group, even before any additional group assignments are made.

This is an important distinction because Relativity also documents that users are then manually added to other groups for operational permissions and workspace access. The Users documentation explains that you create users and then add them to groups, which are associated with workspaces. That confirms that while administrators normally assign users to functional groups after creation, the system-wide Everyone group already applies automatically.

The other options are incorrect. All Users is not the Relativity built-in group name documented by Relativity.

Users are not automatically added to a group is false because the Everyone group membership exists by default. Domain Users is a Windows or directory-services style concept, not the Relativity group referenced in the platform's own security model. For RCA purposes, this matters because the Everyone group has baseline, environment-level significance and certain permissions are managed with that universal membership in mind. Therefore, the correct answer is Everyone .
