A technician needs to manually set an IP address on a computer that is running macOS. Which of the following commands should the technician use?

- A. ping
- B. ipconfig
- C. arpa
- D. ifconfig

Answer: D

Explanation:

ifconfig is a command-line utility that allows you to configure network interfaces on macOS and other Unix-like systems¹. To set an IP address using ifconfig, you need to know the name of the network interface you want to configure (such as en0 or en1), and the IP address you want to assign (such as 192.168.0.150). You also need to use sudo to run the command with administrative privileges². The syntax of the command is:

sudo ifconfig interface address

For example, to set the IP address of en1 to 192.168.0.150, you would type:

sudo ifconfig en1 192.168.0.150

You may also need to specify other parameters such as subnet mask, gateway, or DNS servers, depending on your network configuration³. The other commands are not directly related to setting an IP address on macOS. ipconfig is a similar command for Windows systems⁴, arpa is a domain name used for reverse DNS lookup, and ping is a command for testing network connectivity.
