The Developing Applications using Cisco Core Platforms and APIs (DEVCOR) certification exam also covers the knowledge and skills required to develop applications using various programming languages, including Python, Ruby, and Java. Thus, those who pass the exam will have a deep understanding of how coding contributes to creating applications that meet customer requirements. Furthermore, the exam also covers knowledge on network automation, infrastructure-as-code, containerization, and orchestration. These areas are crucial since they form the core of modern software development methodologies.

NEW QUESTION # 171

Which approach is part of the twelve-factor app methodology?

- A. Maintain states in the app.
- B. Store the configuration in a database.
- C. Leverage available resources to scale the application.
- D. Explicitly declare and isolate dependencies.

Answer: D

Explanation:

One of the Twelve-Factor App principles (Factor II: Dependencies) mandates that an application must explicitly declare all its dependencies (e.g., via a requirements.txt, package.json, or similar), and isolate them (for example, in virtual environments or containers). This ensures that builds are reproducible and that you don't rely on implicit, system-wide libraries.

NEW QUESTION # 172

What is the purpose of the OAuth2 three-legged authorization code grant flow?

- A. Allow the usage of multifactor authentication during token acquisition.
- B. Encrypt API communication between the client and server by using HTTPS.
- C. Obtain a refresh token for extending the validity of the access token.
- D. Secure authorization between a user, a client application, and a resource server.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The OAuth2 three-legged authorization code grant flow is designed for secure authorization between three parties:

1. User (resource owner)
2. Client application (third-party app requesting access)
3. Resource server (where the protected resources are stored)

This flow ensures that the client application can access a user's resources without exposing the user's credentials. Instead, the user grants permission, and the client application exchanges an authorization code for an access token to authenticate future requests. This method is commonly used in web applications and third-party integrations where a user grants access to their account without sharing login credentials.
