- A. Comply with the Standards.
- B. Minimize the cost of the audit engagement.
- C. Eliminate the risk of drawing incorrect conclusions.
- D. Provide a sound basis for audit observations and recommendations.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 80

When dealing with various stakeholders which of the following is true regarding an internal auditor's responsibility to remain objective and independent?

- A. When working on business unit audits it is sometimes sufficient for the internal auditor to report deficiencies only to the unit manager when remediation is not complex
- B. The internal auditor may initially disagree with management's acceptance of a risk, but reevaluate and agree with management's judgment after further discussion
- C. When deciding between conflicting reports of a control's performance from a control operator and the operator's manager the internal auditor should generally believe the manager
- D. Some audit issues may remain unremediated and unreported if management will accept recommendations that the internal auditor deems more important

Answer: B

Explanation:

The statement that the internal auditor may initially disagree with management's acceptance of a risk, but reevaluate and agree with management's judgment after further discussion, is true. This scenario reflects the dynamic nature of risk assessment and management discussions where the auditor, after a comprehensive evaluation and consideration of new information or perspectives, might align with management's decision regarding risk acceptance.
