問題 #1095

The security team notices that the Always On VPN solution sometimes fails to connect. This leaves remote users unprotected because they cannot connect to the on-premises web proxy. Which of the following changes will best provide web protection in this scenario?

- A. Implement network access control.
- B. Create a public NAT to the on-premises proxy.
- C. Install a host-based content filtering solution.
- D. Configure the local gateway to point to the VPN.

答案： C

解題說明：

Installing a host-based content filtering solution on the endpoints ensures that web traffic is filtered locally even when the VPN connection to the on-premises proxy fails, maintaining protection for remote users.

Network access control (A) manages device network access, local gateway configuration (B) does not solve protection if VPN fails, and public NAT (C) exposes internal resources and increases risk.

Endpoint filtering complements VPN for resilient web security, covered in Security Architecture and Operations#6:Chapter 11 CompTIA Security+ Study Guide#.

Code signing involves applying a digital signature to the code using a private key that only the company possesses. The digital signature can be verified by anyone who has the corresponding public key, which can be distributed through a trusted certificate authority. Code signing can prevent unauthorized modifications, tampering, or malware injection into the code, and it can also assure the users that the code is from a legitimate source.
