NEW QUESTION # 121

Which of the following scenarios would best justify creating a channel in your company's existing workspace, rather than starting a direct message?

- A. When a few questions need to be answered quickly
- C. When there is a new line of business at your company
- B. When you need to let your manager know you are not feeling well
- D. When you need to confirm meeting times

Answer: C

Explanation:
Slack best practices advise creating a new channel:
"When you need a dedicated, transparent space for an ongoing topic, team, or project, such as a new line of business." For quick or personal conversations (Options A, C, and D), direct messages are more appropriate.

NEW QUESTION # 122

What would be the expected behavior if a team member in Enterprise Grid is added to an IdP (Identity Provider) group with auto-provisioning enabled to a workspace?

- A. The member would be automatically added to the new workspace and would be unable to leave.
- B. The member would be automatically added to the new workspace unless it is a hidden workspace.
- C. There will be no changes to the member's workspace list.
- D. The member would be notified that they have a new workspace that they can join and would be unable to dismiss it until they have joined the workspace.

Answer: B

Explanation:
In Enterprise Grid, if auto-provisioning is enabled via an IdP group, when a member is added to that group, they are automatically provisioned to the specified workspace. According to Slack's official Enterprise Grid documentation:
"When a member is added to an IdP group that's mapped to a workspace, they will be automatically provisioned (added) to the workspace, unless the workspace is set as hidden." Hidden workspaces require an invitation or manual addition and are excluded from automatic group provisioning. Therefore, unless the workspace is hidden, members will automatically join it without needing to take any manual action.
