CMQ-OE Study Areas

In general, ASQ tests a candidate's knowledge of the seven core domains listed below. Understandably, candidates are expected to be familiar with the topics prior to attempting the validation.

- Leadership

The candidate's knowledge of leadership techniques, teamwork, organizational structures, and ASQ code of ethics will be tested here. Furthermore, the candidate's understanding of the challenges faced by leaders, the roles and responsibilities of leaders alongside managers, change management techniques, types and roles of teams, team development stages, and team evaluation will be looked at.

- Customer-Focused Organizations

This objective mainly assesses the candidate's knowledge of the different types of customers, customer segmentation, and customer relationship management including customer satisfaction and loyalty, principles for services, dealing with external and internal customers, and finally, focus group output.

- Management Elements and Methods

This portion tests all areas of management including human resource management, finance management, risk management, and knowledge management. It also checks the candidate's knowledge of communications skills, project management, quality system, quality models, and theories.

- Training and Development

This domain evaluates the candidate's ability to create training plans and develop training materials, use different tools along with techniques to identify training needs and assess training effectiveness.

- Quality Management Tools

There, the candidate will be tested on the various quality management tools including process improvement tools, basic management tools, innovation & creativity tools, and lean instruments. The candidate will also be expected to have a good understanding of measurement and metrics, which encompasses areas such as statistics, sampling techniques, and trend analysis.
