IBM MQ v9.4 Administrator - Professional Sample Questions (Q49-Q54):

NEW QUESTION # 49

IBM MQ distinguishes between persistent and non-persistent messaging. In which scenario is non-persistent messaging considered appropriate, where performance outweighs durability guarantees?

- A. Legal contract records exchanged between multiple enterprises
- B. Banking payment instructions where every transaction is critical
- C. Live sports score updates streamed to thousands of subscribers
- D. Airline booking transactions that must not be lost under any condition

Answer: C

Explanation:

Non-persistent messages are suitable for use cases like live sports updates, where speed matters more than durability and losing some messages is acceptable.

NEW QUESTION # 50

In IBM MQ, when a message is sent from an application running on a client system to a queue manager located on a remote server, which specific MQ component is responsible for managing the network connection, authenticating the client, and ensuring the message reaches the queue manager securely, and how is this typically configured in a production environment?

- A. Sender channel, which transmits messages directly to the remote queue without authentication
- B. Message channel agent, which temporarily stores messages before forwarding them to the client application
- C. Server-connection (SVRCONN) channel, which allows client applications to connect remotely, handles authentication, and transmits messages securely over TCP/IP
- D. Listener, which continuously monitors local queues and automatically authenticates clients without explicit configuration

Answer: C

Explanation:

SVRCONN channels provide a secure communication path for client applications to connect to remote queue managers, handling authentication and message transfer reliably over TCP/IP.

NEW QUESTION # 51

In a situation where an IBM MQ application requires guaranteed sequencing of messages, such that they are always delivered to the consumer in the exact order they were produced, which MQ mechanism ensures this ordered delivery?

- A. Priority Assignment
- B. First-In-First-Out Queuing
- C. Channel Heartbeats
- D. Backout Handling

Answer: B

Explanation:

IBM MQ guarantees FIFO (First-In-First-Out) message delivery within a single queue, ensuring messages are consumed in the same sequence as they were produced.

NEW QUESTION # 52

When designing an enterprise integration solution using IBM MQ, which configuration best supports fault tolerance and load balancing for hundreds of applications producing and consuming messages simultaneously across multiple platforms?

- A. Multiple queue managers in a cluster with shared queues and automatic routing
- B. A single queue manager with multiple local queues and non-persistent messages
- C. Direct point-to-point channels between each application without clustering
- D. Using file-based messaging with manual intervention for failure handling

Answer: A

Explanation:

MQ clustering allows multiple queue managers to share workload, provides automatic routing of messages, and ensures fault tolerance without manually configuring every channel.

NEW QUESTION # 53

Which IBM MQ administration tool allows an administrator to monitor queue depth, check message status, and perform configuration changes for multiple queue managers from a centralized graphical interface, significantly simplifying management in large environments?

- A. runmqsc command line interface
- B. IBM MQ Explorer
- C. MQSC scripting
- D. MQ Performance Monitoring tool

Answer: B
