NEW QUESTION # 227

Which of the following allows several websites from different companies to be housed on the same virtual server?

- A. Shared resources
- B. Rapid elasticity
- C. High availability
- D. Metered utilization

Answer: A

Explanation:

Shared resources is the concept that allows several websites from different companies to be housed on the same virtual server. A virtual server is a software-based server that runs on a physical server and can host multiple virtual machines (VMs). Each VM can run a different operating system and application, such as a website, and have its own allocated resources, such as CPU, memory, disk space, and network bandwidth.

However, the VMs share the underlying hardware resources of the physical server, which reduces the cost and complexity of maintaining separate servers for each website. This also enables rapid scalability, as new VMs can be created or deleted as needed. One of the methods to host multiple websites on the same virtual server is to use virtual hosts. Virtual hosts are a feature of web servers, such as Apache, that allow the web server to serve different websites based on the domain name or IP address requested by the client. For example, a web server can host two websites, a.

example.com and b.example.com, on the same virtual server and the same port (such as 80 or 443), by using virtual hosts to map each domain name to a different document root directory. The web server will then deliver the content of the corresponding website to the client based on the domain name in the HTTP request header.

NEW QUESTION # 228

An integrated webcam on a user's laptop broke, so a technician installed a temporary, external webcam. Since the external webcam installation, other users can only see part of the user's face during videoconferences.

Which of the following best describes the reason for this issue?

- A. The webcam driver should be updated.
- B. The webcam is not compatible with the OS.
- C. The webcam is plugged into the wrong USB port
- D. The webcam is not on a level surface

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

The most likely reason for this issue is A. The webcam is not on a level surface.

A webcam is a device that captures and transmits video and audio signals over the internet. A webcam can be integrated or external, depending on whether it is built-in or attached to the computer. A webcam can be used for various purposes, such as videoconferencing, streaming, or recording.

An integrated webcam is a webcam that is embedded in the monitor or the bezel of the laptop. An integrated webcam usually has a fixed position and angle, and it can be adjusted by tilting or rotating the laptop screen.

An integrated webcam may have advantages such as convenience, portability, and compatibility, but it may also have disadvantages such as low quality, limited features, or vulnerability to damage.

An external webcam is a webcam that is connected to the computer via a cable or a wireless connection. An external webcam usually has a clip or a stand that allows it to be placed on a level surface or attached to the monitor or the laptop. An external webcam may have advantages such as high quality, advanced features, or flexibility, but it may also have disadvantages such as inconvenience, cost, or compatibility issues.

In this scenario, an integrated webcam on a user's laptop broke, so a technician installed a temporary, external webcam. Since the external webcam installation, other users can only see part of the user's face during videoconferences. This could indicate that the external webcam is not properly positioned or aligned to capture the user's full face. The most likely cause of this issue is that the webcam is not on a level surface, and it is either too high or too low, or too far or too close to the user.

To resolve this issue, the user should adjust the position and angle of the external webcam until it captures their full face clearly and accurately. The user should also check the settings and features of the external webcam, such as zoom, focus, resolution, or brightness, and modify them if necessary. The user should also test the video and audio quality of the external webcam before joining a videoconference .

The other options are not the most likely causes of this issue, because they are not related to the partial face problem. A webcam driver should be updated (option B) if the webcam is not recognized or functioning properly by the computer. A webcam driver is a software component that enables the communication and interaction between the webcam and the operating system. A webcam is plugged into the wrong USB port (option C) if the webcam does not receive enough power or bandwidth from the computer. A USB port is a physical interface that allows data and power transmission between devices. A webcam is not compatible with the OS (option D) if the webcam does not work with the operating system installed on the computer. An operating system is a software program that manages the hardware and software resources of the computer.

NEW QUESTION # 229

A company wants to give third-party developers access to the corporate network through desktop environments that the company can control. Which of the following can BEST achieve these requirements?

- A. Sandbox
- B. VDI
- C. Saas
- D. Private cloud

Answer: B

Explanation:

VDI is a technology that allows a company to provide desktop environments to third-party developers while still maintaining control over the corporate network. VDI creates virtual desktops on a remote server, and each user gets their own desktop environment that is isolated from the other users. This allows the company to maintain control over the corporate network, as the virtual desktops are not directly connected to the corporate network.
