NEW QUESTION # 402

Which of the following strategies promotes timely completion of a quality improvement project?

- A. requiring team members to devote a majority of their time to project work
- B. assigning the team leader to document overall project progress
- C. focusing routine senior leader updates on project successes
- D. allowing the project sponsor to direct the project team's work

Answer: A

Explanation:

To promote the timely completion of a quality improvement project, it is crucial to ensure that there is effective management of the project's progress and that team members are dedicated and focused on the tasks at hand.

Requiring team members to devote a majority of their time to project work: This approach ensures that sufficient time is allocated to the project, minimizing distractions from other duties and speeding up project completion. It highlights commitment and prioritizes the project among other responsibilities.

Among these, Option C is the most direct and effective strategy to promote timely completion, as it prioritizes the project within the team members' workload, ensuring dedicated efforts towards project tasks.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 404

The initial step in clinical pathway development is review of

- A. provider input.
- B. continuous quality improvement methods.
- C. data for targeted population.
- D. patient education materials.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The initial step in clinical pathway development is crucial to ensure that the pathway is relevant, evidence-based, and aligned with the needs of the patient population it intends to serve. The first step is to review and analyze data specific to the targeted population (Answer C). This involves collecting and examining clinical, demographic, and epidemiological data about the patient group for whom the pathway is being designed. This data review helps to identify common diagnoses, treatment outcomes, complications, and variations in care, which will inform the development of a pathway that is both relevant and effective.

The other options are important elements in the development and implementation of a clinical pathway, but they occur later in the process:

Patient education materials (A) are developed after the clinical pathway has been established to ensure that patients understand their care plan.

Continuous quality improvement methods (B) are applied after the pathway has been implemented to monitor its effectiveness and make necessary adjustments.

Provider input (D) is crucial throughout the pathway development but comes after the initial data review when creating or refining the clinical pathway based on practical considerations and clinical expertise.
