Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 91

In service relationships what is a benefit of identifying consumer roles?

- A. It removes constraints from the customer
- B. It enables effective stakeholder management
- C. It provides shared service expectations
- D. It enables a common definition of value

Answer: B

Explanation:

Identifying consumer roles in service relationships is a benefit because it helps the service provider to understand the needs, expectations, and responsibilities of each type of consumer. This enables effective stakeholder management, which is the process of identifying, analyzing, planning, and communicating with the people or groups involved in or affected by a service. By knowing the consumer roles, the service provider can tailor the service offerings, agreements, and interactions to suit each role and create value for them. For example, the service provider can communicate with the customer (the person who defines the requirements and pays for the service) about the service strategy and value proposition, while communicating with the user (the person who uses the service) about the service features and feedback. The sponsor (the person who authorizes the budget and supports the service) can also be involved in the decision-making and governance of the service. By identifying and managing the consumer roles, the service provider can build trust, collaboration, and alignment with the consumers and deliver better service outcomes. References: 1, 2, 3

NEW QUESTION # 92

A software development team is intending to develop many new applications and services. They will need contributions from various practices to achieve this. How should these activities be combined?

- A. Practices should operate as suppliers to each other, using guidance from the 'supplier management' practice
- B. The software development manager should define requirements for all practices and ensure that they contribute to the overall service
- C. Each practice should define the outputs it will produce and the required inputs it needs to succeed
- D. A value stream should be designed to include activities from all practices that are needed

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 93

An organization has IT divisions distributed globally. As the organization has grown, it has become difficult to align the activities of the IT divisions with the organization's objectives. How can the organization ensure that all IT activities are aligned with the organization's objectives?

- A. Collect feedback from both organizational and IT leadership from each region
- B. Priorities risk mitigation strategies in alignment with the organization's risk appetite
- C. Put compliance controls in place to ensure that all centers of expertise are following the same practices
- D. Establish increasingly detailed objectives at each level of the organization that align directly with the objectives of the layer above

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

The best way for the organization to ensure that all IT activities are aligned with the organization's objectives is to establish increasingly detailed objectives at each level of the organization that align directly with the objectives of the layer above. This is based on the ITIL 4 principle of cascading objectives, which is a method for translating high-level strategic objectives into more specific and measurable operational objectives. By doing this, the organization can create a clear line of sight between the vision, mission, and goals of the organization and the actions and outcomes of the IT divisions. This also enables the organization to monitor and evaluate the performance and value of the IT activities and ensure that they are contributing to the achievement of the organization's objectives. The other options are not sufficient to ensure alignment, as they do not address the root cause of the misalignment, which is the lack of clarity and consistency in the objectives. Risk mitigation strategies, compliance controls, and feedback collection are important aspects of IT governance, but they do not necessarily ensure that the IT activities are aligned with the organization's objectives. They may also create unnecessary bureaucracy and overhead that may hinder the agility and innovation of the IT divisions. References:
