NEW QUESTION # 599

Which of the following strategies would be the most effective to share an organization's risk of losses through foreign currency transactions related to the accounts payable process?

- A. Purchasing foreign currency reserves.
- B. Purchasing liability insurance.
- C. Using a hedging strategy.
- D. Implementing controls to follow up on deviations.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The most effective strategy to manage the risk of losses from foreign currency transactions related to the accounts payable process is using a hedging strategy. Hedging involves using financial instruments or market strategies to offset potential losses in investments. In the context of foreign currency transactions, hedging can protect against adverse movements in exchange rates, thereby stabilizing cash flows and reducing the unpredictability of foreign currency expenses. NEW QUESTION # 600

A risk assessment showed that the cost of addressing a particular risk in the organization's human resources department is greater than the perceived benefit. Which risk response approach should the organization take in this scenario?

- A. Transfer the risk.
- B. Reduce the risk.
- C. Accept the risk.
- D. Share the risk.

Answer: C

Explanation:

When a risk assessment shows that the cost of addressing a particular risk is greater than the perceived benefit, the appropriate risk response approach is to accept the risk. Risk acceptance means acknowledging that the risk exists but deciding not to take any action to mitigate it, usually because the cost of mitigation is higher than the potential impact. This approach is a rational decision when the risk is deemed to have a low likelihood or impact, or when other controls are considered sufficient.

- B. Surveying employees to determine whether they are aware of the hotline.
- C. Benchmarking the average time to investigate hotline complaints.
- D. Tracking the number of hotline allegations per total number of employees.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Surveying employees to determine whether they are aware of the ethics hotline is the most effective action to help an internal auditor assess how successful the organization has been in communicating the existence of its ethics hotline. Employee surveys can provide direct feedback on their awareness and understanding of the hotline, allowing the auditor to gauge the effectiveness of communication efforts and identify areas where additional outreach or education may be necessary.
