Cisco Designing and Implementing Enterprise Network Assurance Sample Questions (Q27-Q32):

NEW QUESTION # 27
What is the primary benefit of deploying an endpoint agent across end-user devices in an enterprise network?

- A. Comprehensive visibility into user experience
- B. Decreased network security

- C. Increased network latency
- D. Limited device compatibility

Answer: A

Explanation:
Deploying an endpoint agent across end-user devices provides comprehensive visibility into user experience, helping to identify and address performance issues proactively.

NEW QUESTION # 28

What is a key consideration when configuring network tests using Thousand Eyes and Meraki Insights?

- A. Ensuring data encryption
- B. Maximizing server uptime
- C. Minimizing latency
- D. Analyzing server logs

Answer: C

Explanation:
A key consideration when configuring network tests is minimizing latency to ensure accurate performance measurement and analysis in network assurance.

NEW QUESTION # 29

A company is noticing sporadic slowdowns in their web application performance, impacting user experience.
They suspect it might be related to high CPU utilization on employee laptops, potentially caused by background processes. Which ThousandEyes alert type and condition combination would be most effective in identifying if endpoint CPU performance is contributing to this issue?

- A. Scheduled Tests > Endpoint End-to-End (server), Memory load # %
- B. Real User Tests > Endpoint, CPU utilization # %
- C. Real User Tests > Network Tests and Path Trace, End-to-End Packet Loss
- D. Scheduled Tests > Endpoint Path Trace, Path length > #

Answer: B

Explanation:
In theDesigning and Implementing Enterprise Network Assurance (300-445 ENNA)curriculum, isolating performance issues on end-user machines requires a combination of application-layer experience data and local system telemetry. When an architect suspects that local hardware constraints, such as high CPU usage, are degrading the digital experience, theEndpoint Agentis the required vantage point.
The correct combination isReal User Tests > Endpoint, CPU utilization # %(Option C). This alert configuration is effective for several reasons:
* Targeted Visibility:It directly monitors the user's device (Endpoint) where the hardware bottleneck is suspected to reside.
* Real-Time Context:By utilizingReal User Tests (RUM), the agent gathers performance data during actual user activity (e.g., browsing the web application). This ensures that the CPU spikes are correlated with active application usage, providing a representative view of the impact on experience.
* Threshold Alerting:The condition monitors for CPU utilization exceeding a defined percentage threshold (# %). This allows IT teams to be notified only when the CPU load reaches problematic levels that are known to cause application sluggishness or browser "freezing".
Alternative options are less effective for this specific troubleshooting goal:
* Option A:Monitors network loss, which would not identify a local CPU bottleneck.
* Option B:Monitors path length (hops), which is a routing metric irrelevant to local hardware performance.
* Option D:Monitors memory load during scheduled tests. While memory is a factor, the specific suspicion in this scenario is CPU utilization, and scheduled tests do not always capture the same load impact as a real user interacting with the browser.
