- A. Digital signature
- B. Hash value
- C. Digital certificate
- D. Private key

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 532
As an IT security analyst, you perform network scanning using ICMP Echo Requests. During the scan, several IP addresses do not return Echo Replies, yet other network services remain operational. How should this situation be interpreted?

- A. The lack of Echo Replies indicates an active security breach.
- B. The IP addresses are unused and available for reassignment.
- C. The non-responsive IP addresses indicate severe network congestion.
- D. A firewall or security control is likely blocking ICMP Echo Requests.

Answer: D

Explanation:
The CEH Network Scanning module explains that ICMP Echo Requests are often filtered or blocked by firewalls, routers, or host-based security controls as a defensive measure to reduce reconnaissance exposure.
When systems fail to respond to ICMP Echo Requests but continue to function normally for other services, CEH indicates that this behavior typically means ICMP traffic is being blocked, not that the host is offline or compromised.
Option B is correct.
Option A would affect all services.
Option C lacks supporting indicators.
Option D is speculative and unreliable.
CEH emphasizes that ICMP filtering is common in hardened networks.

NEW QUESTION # 533
What is the minimum number of network connections in a multihomed firewall?

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Module 13: Evading IDS, Firewalls, and Honeypots
Section: Firewall Architecture
Quote:
"A multihomed firewall is a system with two or more NICs connected to different networks, typically used to control traffic between internal and external networks. The minimum number of interfaces is two." Incorrect Options Explained:
A). 3 interfaces may be used in advanced setups (e.g., with a DMZ), but not the minimum.
B & C. 4 or 5 connections are not required unless designing more complex segmentation.
