ECCouncil Certified Ethical Hacker Exam (CEHv13) Sample Questions (Q413-Q418):

NEW QUESTION # 413
An audacious attacker is targeting a web server you oversee. He intends to perform a Slow HTTP POST attack, by manipulating 'a' HTTP connection. Each connection sends a byte of data every 'b' second, effectively holding up the connections for an extended period. Your server is designed to manage 'm' connections per second, but any connections exceeding this number tend to overwhelm the system. Given 'a=100' and variable 'm', along with the attacker's intention of maximizing the attack duration 'D=a*b', consider the following scenarios. Which is most likely to result in the longest duration of server unavailability?

- A. m=90, b=15: The server can manage 90 connections per second, but the attacker's 100 connectionsexceed this, and with each connection held up for 15 seconds, the attack duration could be significant

- B. m=105, b=12: The server can manage 105 connections per second, more than the attacker's 100connections, likely maintaining operation despite a moderate hold-up time
- C. 95, b=10: Here, the server can handle 95 connections per second, but it falls short against theattacker's 100 connections, albeit the hold-up time per connection is lower
- D. m=110, b=20: Despite the attacker sending 100 connections, the server can handle 110 connections persecond, therefore likely staying operative, regardless of the hold-up time per connection

Answer: A

Explanation:
A Slow HTTP POST attack is a type of denial-of-service (DoS) attack that exploits the way web servers handle HTTP requests. The attacker sends a legitimate HTTP POST header to the web server, specifying a large amount of data to be sent in the request body. However, the attacker then sends the data very slowly, keeping the connection open and occupying the server's resources. The attacker can launch multiple such connections, exceeding the server's capacity to handle concurrent requests and preventing legitimate users from accessing the web server.
The attack duration D is given by the formula D = a * b, where a is the number of connections and b is the hold-up time per connection. The attacker intends to maximize D by manipulating a and b. The server can manage m connections per second, but any connections exceeding m will overwhelm the system. Therefore, the scenario that is most likely to result in the longest duration of server unavailability is the one where a > m and b is the largest. Among the four options, this is the case for option B, where a = 100, m = 90, and b = 15.
In this scenario, D = 100 * 15 = 1500 seconds, which is the longest among the four options. Option A has a larger b, but a < m, so the server can handle the connections without being overwhelmed. Option C has a > m, but a smaller b, so the attack duration is shorter. Option D has a > m, but a smaller b and a smaller difference between a and m, so the attack duration is also shorter.

NEW QUESTION # 414
Security administrator John Smith has noticed abnormal amounts of traffic coming from local computers at night. Upon reviewing, he finds that user data have been exfilltrated by an attacker. AV tools are unable to find any malicious software, and the IDS/IPS has not reported on any non-whitelisted programs, what type of malware did the attacker use to bypass the company's application whitelisting?

- A. File-less malware
- B. Zero-day malware
- C. Logic bomb malware
- D. Phishing malware

Answer: A

Explanation:
https://www.mcafee.com/enterprise/en-us/security-awareness/ransomware/what-is-fileless-malware.html Fileless malware can easily evade various security controls, organizations need to focus on monitoring, detecting, and preventing malicious activities instead of using traditional approaches such as scanning for malware through file signatures.Also known as non-malware, infects legitimate software, applications, and other protocols existing in the system to perform various malicious activities.It resides in the system's RAM.
It injects malicious code into the running processes. (P.966/950)

NEW QUESTION # 417
A penetration tester finds malware that spreads across a network without user interaction, replicating itself from one machine to another. What type of malware is this?

- A. Keylogger
- B. Worm
- C. Virus
- D. Ransomware

Answer: B

Explanation:
Comprehensive Explanation from CEH v13 Courseware:
CEH v13 describes worms as standalone malicious programs capable of self-replication without requiring user assistance. Unlike viruses, which need a host file and are triggered typically by user actions, worms propagate autonomously by scanning networks, exploiting vulnerabilities, or copying themselves to accessible machines. Worms are known for causing rapid, widespread damage by consuming bandwidth, degrading system performance, and creating backdoors for attackers. Classic examples such as Conficker, WannaCry, and SQL Slammer reinforce the destructive potential of automated propagation. CEH stresses that worms often use network shares, open ports, or unpatched vulnerabilities to move laterally. In contrast, keyloggers harvest keystrokes, ransomware encrypts data and demands payment, and viruses require user involvement to spread. The behavior in the scenario-automatic replication across the network-is the defining characteristic of worm activity according to CEH's malware taxonomy.
