API Pressure Vessel Inspector Sample Questions (Q36-Q41):

NEW QUESTION # 36

When both the ownership and the location of a pressure vessel are changed, what must be done?

- A. The vessel must be inspected and certified by the original vessel manufacturer
- B. The vessel must be externally and internally inspected prior to re-use
- C. A new nameplate shall be attached to the vessel
- D. The vessel must be inspected externally and certified by the owner/user

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 37

In certain MT Check of pressure Vessel, The size of "indication" for a certain discontinuity was seen as 4 mm but after the MP Check and using magnifying glass it was seen having actual size as 2.5mm only. If stipulated acceptance criterion for that type of discontinuity was 3 mm, your decision is:

- A. The size of indication is higher than 3mm. Reject
- B. The size of discontinuity is lower than 3 mm, Accept.
- C. Depends on the procedure adopted for MPI, i.e. dry or wet particles.
- D. Depends on opinion of Examiner.

Answer: A

Explanation:

the original procedure prescribes naked eye visual check during MT. If you accept the weld based on result obtained by magnifying glass, then you have to revise and re qualify the procedure and repeat the test on every area performed by previous procedure.

NEW QUESTION # 38

Explain the importance of periodic audit reviews in maintaining API-510 compliance for pressure vessel operations.

Answer:

Explanation:

Periodic audit reviews are crucial in maintaining API-510 compliance for pressure vessel operations as they provide an objective assessment of adherence to the standards. These audits help identify any deviations or lapses in compliance before they lead to safety issues. The review process typically involves examining maintenance records, inspection logs, and compliance documentation to ensure that all required procedures are being followed correctly. Audits also offer an opportunity for feedback and continuous improvement, allowing organizations to update their practices in line with the latest standards and technologies.
