Answer: B

Explanation:
Explanation
A flowchart is a business analysis technique that graphically depicts the steps or actions involved in a process or workflow. A flowchart consists of four main components: activities, decisions, forks, and joins. Activities are the tasks or steps that are performed in the process. Decisions are the points where a choice must be made between two or more alternatives. Forks are the points where the flow splits into two or more parallel paths.
Joins are the points where two or more paths converge. Attributes are not a component of flowchart, but rather a term used to describe the characteristics or properties of an entity or object in a data model.
