Business continuity planning is not a one-time activity, but a dynamic and ongoing process that needs to be reviewed and updated regularly to reflect changes in the internal and external environment. The frequency of review may vary depending on the nature and size of the organization, but it is generally recommended to conduct a review at least annually or whenever significant changes occur that may affect the continuity of the organization's functions and processes. Such changes may include organizational restructuring, new products or services, new technologies, new regulations, new threats or vulnerabilities, or lessons learned from incidents or exercises. Damage assessment includes all but which of the following steps?

- A. Evaluating the time to restore operations and if greater than the MTD, a disaster should be declared and BCP enacted
- B. Identifying the affected business functions.
- C. Estimate the time it will take to restore critical business functions.
- D. Having the insurance company declare the total extent of the damages.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

Damage assessment is the process of evaluating the extent and severity of the damage caused by a disruption to an organization's facilities, equipment, systems, data, records, or personnel. It includes identifying the affected business functions and processes, estimating the time it will take to restore them to normal or acceptable levels of operation, and evaluating whether the recovery time exceeds the maximum tolerable downtime (MTD) for each function or process. If so, a disaster should be declared and the business continuity plan should be activated. Having the insurance company declare the total extent of the damages is not part of the damage assessment process, as it may take longer than the MTD and may not reflect the operational impact of the damage.
