NEW QUESTION # 20

What is one example of effective Scrum Masters/Team Coaches thinking beyond the day-to-day?

- A. Encourage the team to focus on moving Stories through the system
- B. Facilitating Team Sync to focus on value delivered throughout the Iteration
- C. Help the team prioritize improvement activities to ensure progress
- D. Coaching the team to focus on writing smaller Stories that move more quickly through the system

Answer: C

Explanation:

An effective Scrum Master/Team Coach (SM/TC) not only supports the team's daily operations but also helps them grow and improve over time. Thinking beyond the day-to-day means guiding the team toward strategic improvement and long-term effectiveness, not just tactical task completion.

By helping the team prioritize improvement activities to ensure progress, Scrum Masters promote a mindset of continuous learning and adaptation. This aligns with SAFe's Relentless Improvement pillar, encouraging the team to use metrics, feedback, and retrospectives to drive sustained enhancement in flow, quality, and collaboration.

From SAFe guidance:

"Scrum Masters help teams improve continuously by identifying, prioritizing, and pursuing improvement opportunities that enhance value delivery and team performance." Thus, the correct answer is D. Help the team prioritize improvement activities to ensure progress, as this demonstrates strategic thinking beyond daily coordination.
