NEW QUESTION # 511

The business need is considered to be the most critical step in the business analysis effort. Why is the definition of the business need considered the most critical step?

- A. The definition of the business need determines future solutions, stakeholders, and approaches.
- B. The business need defines the problem the business analyst is finding a solution for.
- C. The business need defines the solution for the business problem.
- D. The business need takes the longest time and costs most of the business analysis efforts.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The way the business need is defined directly affects the solutions offered, the stakeholders involved, and the approaches the organization may take to seize the opportunity or solutions.

Answer A is incorrect. This is the definition of what the business need is, but it's not the best answer for the QUESTION.

Answer B is incorrect. The business need does not define the solution; it shows the need for a solution.

Answer C is incorrect. This is not a valid statement about this process of the business analysis effort.

NEW QUESTION # 512

You are the business analyst for your organization. Management has asked you to define and document the requirements of an endeavor so that the requirements may be reused again in the organization. Why would an organization want to re-use requirements?

- A. Re-using requirements doesn't mean re-using the requirements over and over, but tracing the requirements to actual deliverables.
- B. Re-using requirements is useful if the current solution fails.
- C. Re-using requirements is useful if the organization wants to sell the set of requirements to its customers.
- D. Re-using requirements is useful when the requirements are something the organization must do on an ongoing basis.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 513

Complete this sentence. If a requirement cannot be verified, it cannot be successfully.

- A. Implemented
- B. Scheduled
- C. Assigned
- D. Estimated

Answer: A

Explanation:

According to the BABOK Guide, a requirement is a usable representation of a need that specifies what a stakeholder requires from a solution. A requirement must be verifiable, which means that it can be tested, validated, or confirmed by some objective means. If a requirement cannot be verified, it cannot be successfully implemented, because there is no way to ensure that the solution meets the requirement and delivers the expected value. NEW QUESTION # 514

A business analyst (BA) has elicited the following requirement; "The solution must ensure the portal response times are under 2 seconds." What requirement classification schema does this requirement belong to?

- A. Nonfunctional requirements
- B. Stakeholder requirements
- C. Transitional requirements
- D. functional requirements

Answer: A

Explanation:

The requirement classification schema that this requirement belongs to is nonfunctional requirements. Nonfunctional requirements are statements of conditions or restrictions on a solution or its components that affect its quality, performance, usability, reliability, security, etc. Nonfunctional requirements specify how well a solution should perform or behave.

The other options are incorrect because:

Option B is incorrect because stakeholder requirements are not a requirement classification schema, but a requirement type.

Stakeholder requirements are statements of needs, expectations, preferences, or problems of stakeholders or an organization.

Option C is incorrect because transitional requirements are not a requirement classification schema, but a requirement type.

Transitional requirements are statements of capabilities or conditions that enable a solution to transition from its current state to its desired future state.

Option D is incorrect because functional requirements are not a requirement classification schema, but a requirement type. Functional requirements are statements of features, functions, or behaviors of a solution or its components that enable it to provide value to stakeholders.

CCBA Exam Questions, question 35

NEW QUESTION # 515

A stakeholder has requested an extremely detailed resolution to an issue during current state analysis that may consume about 20% of the estimated project effort. How should the business analyst (BA) handle the situation?

- A. Spend the required effort to develop the detail
- B. Escalate the request to the project manager for reevaluation of the plan
- C. Explain that the degree of effort may not be necessary at this stage
- D. Ask the project sponsor for additional funding

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

According to the BABOK® Guide, a business analyst (BA) should perform current state analysis to understand the existing situation and identify the root causes of problems or opportunities for improvement.

However, the BA should also balance the level of detail and effort required for the analysis with the value and relevance of the information obtained. In this scenario, the stakeholder's request for an extremely detailed resolution to an issue may not be necessary or feasible at this stage, as it could consume a significant amount of the project resources and time. Therefore, the BA should explain to the stakeholder the rationale and implications of the request, and suggest a more appropriate level of detail that aligns with the project scope and objectives. This way, the BA can manage the stakeholder's expectations and ensure the current state analysis is performed efficiently and effectively. References:
