NEW QUESTION # 85

What do you use to write data from a local table in SAP Datasphere to an outbound target?

- A. Transformation Flow
- B. Replication Flow
- C. Data Flow
- D. CSN Export

Answer: C

Explanation:

To write data from a local table in SAP Datasphere to an outbound target, you primarily use a Data Flow. A Data Flow in SAP Datasphere is a powerful tool designed for comprehensive data integration and transformation. It allows you to extract data from various sources (including local tables within Datasphere), perform various transformations (like joins, aggregations, filtering, scripting), and then load the processed data into a specified target. This target can be another local table, a remote table, or an outbound target like an external database or a file system. While a Replication Flow (C) is used for ingesting data into Datasphere, and a Transformation Flow (A) is not a standalone artifact for outbound writes (often part of a Data Flow), the Data Flow provides the complete framework for extracting, transforming, and loading data, including sending it to external destinations.
