NEW QUESTION # 140

Which type of Microsoft Exchange DAG configuration must be used to perform a backup from passive databases, unless the database has a single active copy?

- A. Secondary backup
- B. Passive backup
- C. Preferred backup
- D. Active backup

Answer: C

Explanation:

When protecting Microsoft Exchange ServerDatabase Availability Groups (DAG), PowerProtect Data Manager provides administrators with the flexibility to manage the impact of backup operations on production workloads.

* Preferred Backup Node Logic: Within the Exchange protection policy settings, the "Preferred" configuration allows the administrator to specify which node should be prioritized for backup tasks. In most enterprise environments, this is configured to target a passive node to ensure that the active node- which is actively serving user mailboxes-is not subjected to the I/O overhead of a backup.

* The Single Active Copy Exception: PPDM is designed with an "always protect" philosophy. If the database exists as only a single active copy (meaning no healthy passive copies are available or have been configured), the system will automatically default to backing up the active copy, even if a "Preferred" passive node was specified. This ensures that the data is protected regardless of the DAG's current health state.
