NEW QUESTION # 405

If fixed costs are $200,000 and 20,000 units are produced, a unit's fixed cost is $10. This is an example of:

- A. activity-based costing (ABC).
- B. overhead costing.
- C. absorption costing.
- D. variable costing.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Absorption costing is a method of allocating all manufacturing costs to the units produced. It includes both fixed and variable costs in the calculation of the unit cost. In this example, the fixed cost per unit is $10, which is obtained by dividing the total fixed cost of $200,000 by the number of units produced (20,000). This fixed cost per unit is then added to the variable cost per unit to get the total unit cost under absorption costing.

Variable costing, on the other hand, only assigns variable costs to the units produced and treats fixed costs as period costs. Activity-based costing (ABC) is a method of allocating overhead costs to products or services based on the activities they consume.

Overhead costing is a general term that refers to any method of assigning overhead costs to products or services. NEW QUESTION # 406

An effective approach to projecting requirements for materials with long lead times Includes which of the following options?

- A. Initiate a multilevel master schedule.
- B. Decrease the planning horizon.
- C. Use phantom bills of materials (BOMs).
- D. Increase the level of safety stock.

Answer: A

Explanation:

An effective approach to projecting requirements for materials with long lead times is to initiate a multilevel master schedule. A multilevel master schedule is a detailed plan that shows the quantities and timing of the end items and all of their components at each level of the bill of materials (BOM). By using a multilevel master schedule, a planner can determine the requirements for materials with long lead times and place orders in advance to avoid shortages or delays. A phantom bill of materials (BOM) is a temporary grouping of components that are used in the production of a parent item, but do not exist as a separate item in inventory. A phantom

BOM is not an effective approach to projecting requirements for materials with long lead times, as it does not reflect the actual demand for the components. Increasing the level of safety stock is a way of mitigating the risk of uncertainty in demand or supply, but it is not an effective approach to projecting requirements for materials with long lead times, as it increases the inventory carrying costs and does not address the root cause of the problem. Decreasing the planning horizon is the opposite of an effective approach to projecting requirements for materials with long lead times, as it reduces the visibility and accuracy of the forecast and increases the likelihood of stockouts or excess inventory.
