Individuals make decisions about their physical and mental health because serious illnesses can significantly impact them and their families. Just as family health is tied to individual members, a nation's health is connected to its people. A country's economic strength relies on a healthy workforce. Hence, governments monitor the health of their populations, examining connections between health and lifestyle. The World Health Organization (WHO) uses this data to answer: How healthy is the world?

The WHO assesses large populations' health using life expectancy and mortality rates. Life expectancy measures the average age people are expected to live. Since the 20th century, life expectancy has significantly increased worldwide. For example, the average global citizen now lives 27 years longer than a century ago. Japan shows even more dramatic increases, with people living 38 years longer on average than 100 years ago. These improvements indicate that the world is healthier now than in the past century.

Mortality rates, the second indicator, measure deaths in specific regions, focusing on premature deaths. WHO emphasizes child mortality, which makes up over 20 percent of all premature deaths. Though global child mortality has decreased by 30 percent since 1990, significant disparities exist between nations and within countries. Mortality rates fall faster in wealthier nations and among higher-income individuals, highlighting ongoing health inequalities.

Governments aim to reduce mortality rates by targeting premature death causes. While infectious diseases still cause millions of deaths, particularly in developing countries, there has been progress. HIV/AIDS, once stigmatized and ignored, has seen a 16 percent decline in new infections globally between 2000 and 2008 due to prevention efforts and new drugs.

Lifestyle choices significantly affect life expectancy and mortality rates. Obesity and smoking are major health risks, with obesity reducing life expectancy by up to 20 years and smoking causing millions of deaths annually. The CDC estimates a billion smokers worldwide, with 80 percent in developing countries. Lifestyle choices thus pose health risks for individuals and nations alike.

By examining life expectancy, mortality rates, and lifestyle, we get a mixed view of global health. While people live longer due to improved life expectancy, infectious diseases and poor lifestyle choices still cause millions of deaths. Improving global health requires continued efforts in health education, job provision, and income increase, highlighting the link between education, income, and health. Better-educated individuals make healthier lifestyle choices, benefit from improved job prospects, and pass these advantages to their children, ultimately enhancing global health.
