NEW QUESTION # 192

What are three valid source or D=destination conditions available as Security policy qualifiers? (Choose three.)

- A. Application
- B. Zone ab
- C. User
- D. Service
- E. Address

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:

Three valid source or destination conditions available as Security policy qualifiers are User, Application, and Zone. These qualifiers allow you to define the match criteria for a Security policy rule based on the identity of the user, the application used, and the zone where the traffic originates or terminates. You can use these qualifiers to enforce granular security policies that control access to network resources and prevent threats¹. Some of the characteristics of these qualifiers are:

User: The User qualifier allows you to specify the source or destination user or user group for a Security policy rule. The firewall can identify users based on various methods, such as User-ID, Captive Portal, or GlobalProtect. You can use the User qualifier to apply different security policies for different users or user groups, such as allowing access to certain applications or resources based on user roles or privileges².

Application: The Application qualifier allows you to specify the application or application group for a Security policy rule. The firewall can identify applications based on App-ID, which is a technology that classifies applications based on multiple attributes, such as signatures, protocol decoders, heuristics, and SSL decryption. You can use the Application qualifier to allow or deny access to specific applications or application groups, such as enabling web browsing but blocking social networking or file sharing³.

Zone: The Zone qualifier allows you to specify the source or destination zone for a Security policy rule. A zone is a logical grouping of one or more interfaces that have similar functions or security requirements. The firewall can apply security policies based on the zones where the traffic originates or terminates, such as intrazone, interzone, or universal. You can use the Zone qualifier to segment your network and isolate traffic based on different trust levels or network functions⁴.

NEW QUESTION # 193

An administrator has configured a Security policy where the matching condition includes a single application, and the action is deny. If the application's default deny action is reset-both, what action does the firewall take?

- A. It silently drops the traffic.
- B. It silently drops the traffic and sends an ICMP unreachable code.
- C. It sends a TCP reset to the client-side and server-side devices.
- D. It sends a TCP reset to the server-side device.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Drop:

Silently drops the traffic; for an application, it overrides the default deny action. A TCP reset is not sent to the host/application.

NEW QUESTION # 194

An administrator would like to protect against inbound threats such as buffer overflows and illegal code execution. Which Security profile should be used?

- A. URL filtering
- B. Vulnerability protection
- C. Antivirus
- D. Anti-spyware

Answer: B

Explanation:

Vulnerability Protection profiles protect against threats entering the network. For example, Vulnerability Protection profiles help protect against buffer overflows, illegal code execution, and other attempts to exploit system vulnerabilities.

NEW QUESTION # 195

Assume a custom URL Category Object of "NO-FILES" has been created to identify a specific website?

How can file uploading/downloading be restricted for the website while permitting general browsing access to that website?

- A. Create a Security policy with a URL Filtering profile that references the site access setting of continue to NO-FILES.
- B. Create a Security policy with a URL Filtering profile that references the site access setting of block to NO-FILES.
- C. Create a Security policy that references NO-FILES as a URL Category qualifier with an appropriate Data Filtering profile.
- D. Create a Security policy that references NO-FILES as a URL Category qualifier with an appropriate File Blocking profile.

Answer: D
